Volume LXXII.

Boston, Wednesday, July 18, 1894.

Number 20.

Zion's Herald.

CHARLES PARKHURST, Editor. ALONZO S. WEED, Publisher.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. Price, $3.50 per year, including postage.
36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

All stationed preachers in the Methodist I al Church are authorised agents for their locality

[Entered as second-class mail matter.]

The Outlook.

The men of Connecticut are both inventive and hu mans. They have invented an automatic hanging-machine on which Jack Cronin is to be executed, August 24. The State Board of Charities unanimously requested Warden Woodbridge not to use it, for the n that its use would be suicide. The warden sought legal and medical advice. The lawyers decided that the machine would et the requirements of the law; and the meet the requirements of the law; and the doctors, after inspecting, approved the death instrument in every particular. The warden and directors claim that, as the culprit is forced to take his position under the gallows, the execution by his weight can-ercial need of Southern California is a deep-water harbor for the shipping of the Pacific; and this need could be met, accord-Panine; and this need could be met, according to the surveys and estimates of the army engineers, by improving San Pedro Bay, near Los Angeles, and at the terminus of the railroad from Sacramento. C. P. Huntington, president of the Southern Padic Railroad, is endeavoring to persuade igress to make the improvements at Santa Monica Bay, where his road termi-mates. It remains to be seen whether Con-gress will follow the interest of the railroad magnate, or the counsel of the engineers.

n-ill ler o-int

The "Daring," a torpede-boat desireyer, built by J. I. Thornycroft & Co., and one of the forty-two vessels of her class in the British navy, is the fastest ship afloat. The "Horne attained 28.6 knots — supposed to be the highest speed; but the "Daring" attained the phenomenal speed, on her recent official trial, and against the tide, of 29.268 knots per hour. The "Daring" is 185 feet long, 19 feet wide, 13 feet deep, and draws 7 feet

John Paul Jones, though English born, sided with the colonies in 1775 and fought bravely against his country. He was an early edi-tion of Semmes, half pirate, half dare-devil, generally for the American government, but always a sort of free lance for John Paul Jones. For this bold seaman, who obtained the honors of a commodore in the American navy, Congressman Cummings, in a bill before Congress, asks an appropriation of 850,000 for a statue of "Commodore Paul Jones, the sponsor of the Stars and Stripes

The Admission of Utah.

The Territory of Utah has bad a troubled and eventful history. The effort to estab-lish there a type of civilization alien to that of the country has been determined and persistent, but the spirit of the American people has resisted all the attempts of this itory to enter the Union until guarantees in favor of republican order had been secured, not only on paper, but in the character of the inhabitants. The gentile population is now quite large, and will no doubt rapidly increase, and adequate legal meas ures have been taken to neutralize the polygamous taint. The House of Repre tives passed favorably on Utah's admission some months ago, and now the Senate passes the House bill with only two ng votes. The measure had bee inevitable, and the contest in the ate related entirely to amendments uling certain railroad subsidies and fixing

Earthquake at Constantinople.

Three violent shocks of an earthquake oc curred at Constantinople on the 10th inst, which shattered or overthrew many build ings and produced widespread alarm among the people, not less than fifty of whom perished in the concussions. The damage extended through the city and suburbs. The extended through the dity and subarbs. The Bourse, banks, and public departments were all closed, and many thousands of people field beyond the city, fearing to remain in their houses. The first shock occurred at 12.30 P. M., and was quickly followed by another equally severe; the third coming at four o'clock. Many houses collapsed in the city and in the villages on the shores of the Bosphorus, while others were so badly shattered as to render them uneafe. badly shattered as to render them unsare.

The loud rumbling of the earth, and the swaying of the buildings at each shock, sent terror through the whole city, and the inhabitants fied to the open spaces or beyond the walls. The streets were strewn with telegraph poles, and the debris of fallen edifices. The churches and minarets shared in the general damage, and the façades of many elegant private residences were shattered or destroyed. The city presented a strange scene of alarm and Still severer shocks were felt later.

Anti-Anarchist Legislatio

Anti-Anarchist Legislation.

The assassination of President Carnot has stirred all Europe to strike the class of terrorists to which the desperate Santo belongs. The anarchists—the enemies of civil order, the Thugs of modern society, who propose to substitute the methods of savages for those of civilization—are to be hunted down as never before by the governments of Europe. Simultaneously France, Italy and England are proposing legislation against them. The aim of this legislation, the exact features of which are not yet known, is to prevent the spread of anarchistic doctrines, to render summary and certain the conviction of this criminal class, and tain the conviction of this criminal class, and to prevent the notoriety they all seek. The Italian government was the first to act in the matter. Signor Crispi has introduced a bill, which proposes to increase both the severity of the existing law in regard to the manufacture and possession of explosives and the penalty, and which provides for throwing the burden of proof on the ac-cused. The bill forbids the publication of anarchistic writings, and the utterance of anarchistic sentiments, and apologies for anarchists. A bill of similar import has been introduced into the French Chambers. The bill refers these offences to a correctional tribunal, composed of judges without juries. The bill takes note of written and spoken offences, and incitements to mur-der and incendiarism, and fixes the maximum penalty. The English bill has been prepared by Lord Salisbury, and has been approved by the cabinet. These bills will go far to silence the blatant sulogists of arson and murder in these countries. The sympathetic utterance or spoken threat, as rell as the actual crime, incurs guilt.

The Ottawa Conference.

The doings of the Conference at Ottawa, ed of delegates from the different British colonies, are viewed at home with mingled feelings of favor and distrust. The Conference exhibited an intelligent view of the situation and an independence of judgment in regard to the mutual interests of the empire and its colonies. the Conference "affirmed the unity of the empire, not as a mere abstract sentiment, depending upon vaguely-considered ties of blood, but as the basis of the practical assertion of an economical principle and po-the date at which the Utah senstors are to be admitted. The subsidy clauses were finally all rejected, save the original one reported by the committee in favor of the Danville road, and the senators are not to be admitted until 1896.

It itical right," was very grateful to the home government. In return for this assertion, the Conference asked for cable and steam-ship subventions, which will no doubt be accorded. The claim of a right to enset a colonial tariff against foreign nations, is regarded with some doubt or disfavor. That would be an exercise of sovernighty which would be an exercise of sovereignty which would be quite liable to conflict with the interests and obligations of the empire, involving it in trouble with governments rith which England has lucrative tra lations. To touch trade is to touch the quick in the nation's make-up.

Soundings in the Pacific.

For two and a half years, from 1883 to 1880, H. M. S. "Egeria" was engaged in sounding the deep seas between the North Cape in New Zealand and the Phoenix Isis near the equator, the distance between the extreme points being 2,000 miles. The design of the soundings was to ascertain what islands might make secure stations for the new cable to be laid in those waters. The Admiralty and Colonial offices united The Admiralty and Colonial offices united in the work, which has been brought to a satisfactory close. The soundings were regarded as necessary, as some of the islands have a very slight base and are liable to disappear at any time below the waves. Some of them are hardly more than alight columns rising from the sea bottom for thousands of feet. This mere pipe-stem is liable to break.

The Senate Sustains the President.

The Senate Sustains the President.

In the industrial world, the past has been an eventful week. A determinative crisis has been reached and passed. The disturbances at Ohioago threatened the peace and prosperity of the whole country. No one knew how deep or widespread was the public disaffection, or how fully the President would be sustained in sending federal troops to the disturbed district. The act roused the opposition of the labor leaders and their sympathizers, among whom was the Governor of Illinois, where the disturbances cenor of Illinois, where the disturbances centred. Senator Kyle, of North Dakots, had offered an inflammable resolution in favor of the strikers and the uprising in Ohicago; and in the very stress of the struggle, Pef-fer, the Populist senstor from Kansas, presented a resolution in favor of the govern-mental control of interstate railroads, regulating the freight and passenger rates and fixing the wages of the employees; the sen-ator followed with an unguarded and incendiary speech. But at this point the tide turned. Some men, in Congress and out, began to see that the country was moving upon the verge of civil war, and that a halt must be called. Senator Davis, of Minnesota, convinced that the President must be sustained in his attempt to put down dis-order, came down upon Peffer in a withering and annihilating reply. The electricity in his utterance tended to clear the atmos-He was followed in equally incisive and burning words by Senator Gordon of Georgia, who spoke for civil order and against the rule of violence. These clarion voices from the Northwest and the South rang out through the country and found a response from the whole people. Senator Daniel's resolution, indorsing the Presi-dent's action, was substituted for Peffer's. It was as follows:

Resolved: That the Senate indorses the prompt and vigorous measures adopted by the President of the United States and the members of his administration to repulse and repress by military force the interference of lawless men with the due process of the laws of the United States and due process of the laws of the United States and with the transportation of the mails of the United States and with the commerce among the States. The action of the President and his administration has the full sympathy and support of the law-abiding masses of the people of the United States, and he will be supported by all departments of the government and by the power and resources of the entire nation.

The resolution passed unanimously, not even Peffer, Allen or Kyle venturing to vote in the negative.

The Arrest of Debs.

The arrest of the labor leader was a delleate and, as some thought, a dangerous matter. Some of his seconds had declared that his arrest would bring civil war. In the face of this prophecy, the President ordered the arrest, while he held his hand quietly but firmly on the centre of disturb-ance, and was undeterred in his efforts to restore order. The Senate was behind him, the country was behind him also, and it was felt more deeply with each hour that he was master of the situation. The arrest, so far from increasing the violence, marked an additional ebb in the tide. Debbs himself, through the good offices of the mayor was recorded. offices of the mayor, was prepared to com-promise. He offered to call off the strike on condition that the railroad managers would restore the men to their places; but the offer was rejected, and Debs had only the President's offer to appoint an investi-gating commission left him. The railroad leader held on as long as he could; but he found any further advance impossible.

Sovereign's Order.

Meantime, to aid Debs, J. R. Sovereign, General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, a million strong, ordered a gener-al strike. But he was too late; the tide was rapidly going out, and the failure of the movement had become inevitable. Sovereign's order fell flat. Of the million Sovereign's order fell fat. Of the million Knights, less than 14,000 responded to the call of their chief. His sovereignty was at an end; for the reason that the mass of the order deemed his course unwise. In this way the whole movement has really collapsed without any direct gain to anybody. The trains are again in motion, the mails are on their way to their destination, and the course of trade is once more peach the course of trade is once more unob-structed. The disorder was suppressed with slight loss of life; and for this result we are greatly indebted to the firmness of the President and the prudence of Gen. Miles. All was done resolutely; nothing rashly. Labor was not to receive aid through violence and blood. We trust the embers, still hot, will not be blown to fresh

The Christian Endeavorers.

Neither numbers nor enthusiasm were lacking in the Thirteenth International Convention held in Cleveland last week. Bven the great strike collapsed in season to permit gatherings on the opening evening (July 11) in fourteen churches and the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, and before the Convention came to an end on the 18th the total registration of delegates reached 40,000, of which number 14,790 came from points outside of Ohio. Governor McKinley gave the address of welcome at the first regular session, on the 12th. Secretary Bacr announced the total membership of the Society to be 2,028,800, and stated that during the past twelve months 186,650 members have joined the churches. In the United States the denominational representation is as follows: the Presbyterians still lead, with 6,652 companies; the Congregationalists have 5,488; Baptists, 3,203; Disciples of Christ and Christians, 2,895; Methodist Episcopal, 1,287; and so on through a long list. In Canada the Presbyterians lead; the Methodists are next. England the Baptists are in the van. There are 6,471 Junior companies. Great regret was expressed at the absence of President Clark, on account of illness, but his annual address was read to listening, sympathetic thousands and proved to be especially inspiring. Rev. C. A. Dickinson acted as presiding officer. Excellent addresses were given by leading ministers and laymen who are identified with the movement, on the various phases of activity which come within the scope of the Society's plan. Among the speakers on the closing day was Miss Frances E. Willard. Resolutions against intoxicants and Sabbath-desecration were passed, and in favor of the movement for Christian citisenship. Next year, if arrangements can be made, the Convention will meet in San Francisco.

Contributors.

CHARITY. J. W. Ads

Of all the themes that e'er engage The tengue or peut of post, sage, None more divine can ever be Than heaven-born, God-like charity.

Of what avail is eloquence,
Or marvelous prophetic sense,
Or faith which moustains can ren
Or giving, not inspired by love?
What profit may we hope to gain
By bravest martyr's flory pain,
If we love not, as love we can,
Our Maker and our fellow-man? Our Maker and our fellow-m

Love suffereth long, and love is kind; Love is of gentle, lowly mind. When others share a happier lot Than falls to us, love envieth not Love never proudly vaunts itself; Is not puffed up with fame or pelf; "Its seemly in behavior, too; And "I" subordinates to "you;" It never into passion files, And will not evil thoughts surmise; It joys not in inquity,
But in truth's juster equity;
It all things bears, believes, endures,
And never-failing grace ensures.

All prophecy shall pass away When dawns the soul's fruition-day; The special gift of tongues shall cease
When triumphs here the Prince of Peace. Vainglorious knowledge, in that day, Shall also vanish quite away. In part we know and prophesy, But in the perfect by and by We shall not, in that better land, As children speak and understand. That which we now but dimly trace Shall then be seen, as face to face; And they who stand before God's throne Shall know, as even they are known.

And now abide the royal three— Faith, Hope, and blessed Charity; But, rising evermore above, And queen of these, is Perfect Love. Greenland, N. H.

MEN WHOM I HAVE HEARD

In Congress, On the Platform, In the Pulpit III.

Rev. Mark Trafte

A T the head of the Massachusetts Bar for nearly half a century stood

Rufus Choate.

A splendid specimen of the genus homo, h measured six feet in height, straight as an arrow, with no superfluous flesh, but mus-cular and rapid in his movements. His face was mobile, pale, thin, and, even though in the vigor of manhood, strangely wrinkled; his eyes were large, black, and piercing; his hair, black as a raven's wing, curled all over his massive head. A full, overhanging brow showed clear perception and penetra tion; full at the temples, denoting ideality and fancy. The posterior of his head, not sloping suddenly off, but slightly raised, showed indomitable will, while that fullness behind his ears exhibited combativen

Thus he appeared the last time I heard him speak, in 1846, when I stood on my feet six hours listening to, probably, the greatest effort of his life, in defence of a murderer. By the daily papers I had learned of a homicide in Boston and that the trial of the supposed murderer was in progress in the court room. I had no curiosity to witness it, but passing through Court Square on that day, I met my old friend, Col. Pratt, a deputy-sheriff, on his way into the Court House. After a handshake he said, "Come, go in and hear Choate defend that scoundrel Tirrell; he is to make his plea this morning." Now I should not wonder if Sheriff Pratt thought and said to himself: "Shall ave to hang that scamp."

There was a great crowd through which we had to press our way, but the sheriff was a court officer and must pass, and I followed close on his heels until he brought me to the front where I could at a glance take in the whole scene. The district attorney had brought in all the evidence and closed his plea. All the evidence bore so hard upon the prisoner that it was a foregone conclu-sion that a death sentence must follow. There could be no doubt of the guilt of the culprit.

There sat the self-pos black eyes sweeping the great crowd leader of a "forlorn hope." He had He had ar-. The ac course, sat where the jury could see him in The aged father and moth with a little child, apparently their youngest, were placed where the jury could see them. And now the great orator rose and straightened himself up, rolling his eyes around from the judges on the bench and the crowd in the room to the jury, which he sharply scanned. "May it please the court and gentlemen of the jury: Gentlemen of the jury," said he, lifting his arm and pointing to the prisoner, "look on that young man at the bar: in the full flush of many beauty, in perfect health, his breasts full of milk and his bones of marrow." Thus he went on: then called attention to the grav-haired on; then called attention to the gray-haired father and mother. "The unhappy mother who bore him, who clasped him to her bosom, from which he drew his life." So he went on for some time. The eyes of many grew moist with sympathetic emotion. I looked at the jury and saw that they were wrestling with the rising tide of sympathy. Choate here paused a m then, turning full upon the jury, his eyes new ablaze, and shaking that long finger at m, he burst forth in startling to "Gentlemen, if you bring in a verdict of guilty, that young man will be hanged by the neck like a dog!" It is forty-six years since I listened to that startling expression, and I hear it yet! He then took the evidence and went over it carefully, only mak ing remarks upon the unreliability of "circumstantial evidence." He even admitted the preponderance of evidence against the

He had now been speaking three hours. The reader must not suppose that he had been calmly addressing the jury as one hears public speakers in these days of "high culture." No; he had stormed, and had thrown himself about, and indulged in victorial statements. lent gesticulation until he was in a state of profuse perspiration. The linen of his un-dergarment was limp with sweat, his hair as wet as if dipped in water. In pleading a cause once he split his coat from the collar to the waist.

He now paused, and addressing the court said, "Will it please your honors to grant me a recess of ten minutes?" It was granted, and Choate left the room. The audience took a deep inspiration. "It's of no use," took a deep inspiration. "It's of no use," said one to another, "he is laboring in vain. Tirrell is guilty."

He enters again. His wet garments have been changed, he has been bathed and rubbed down, and now appears fresh and ready. His first sentence almost took one's breath away: "Gentlemen of the jury, I adbreath away: "Gentlemen of the jury, I admit the killing of this woman by the prisoner at the bar. I deny the guilt or responsibility." It came like the explosion of a bomb. The judges leaned forward and looked hard at him. The astonished jury looked at each other. The audience smiled. "I told you so," said one to another. Then he went on to show that killing was not of necessity murder. "Where is a motive in this case for the act? There were no marnecessity murder. "Where is a motive in this case for the act? There were no mar-ital bonds to chafe and fret either party. She was his leman, not a lawful wife. He could bid her go, or go himself." After a long exposition of law, he took up the testimony of the mother that her son the prisoner was a sleep-walker from early child-hood. The defence, then, to the astonished court, jury and audience, was on the ground of "constitutional somnambulism." jury brought in a verdict of " not guilty," and the guilty scamp walked out a free man. But there was in this case a sad episode. The next day after the trial I was sitting in my study in Cambridgeport, when the serv-ant girl rapped at my door and informed me that a man in the sitting-room wished to see me. I descended, opened the door, and, looking on the stranger, exclaimed, "James Bickford! Where did you come from?" It had been twenty years since this man and myself were fellow-apprentices together. For three and a half years we had sat on our respective benches in the same room, he the half-brother of our master, and this was our first meeting since. I saw at once that the poor fellow was in trouble, and said: "James, you are in trouble. Can I help you?" "No," he said, "you cannot help me. That woman Tirrell murdered was my wife!"

Lardner and Thackeray.

It was my good fortune to listen to two courses of the "Lowell Lectures" in Boston by the above-named lecturers. Lard-ner's lectures were purely scientific. They e subsequently published under his ful revision. One remarkable fact is that they were orally delivered. The learned doctor was a slim, active man, voluble, clear in statement, and never hesitating. A wonder it was that whatever branch of scientific research he took up, from astronomy to the steam-engine, he exhibited a thorough acquaintance with all its bearings. A vast degree of amusement was created by his ematical demonstration that no ship could ever cross the Atlantic by steam power alone, as, whatever her tonnage, she could not carry sufficient coal to generate the power necessary for her propulsion. A report of that lecture was carried to England by the steamship "Great Western." I notice that in his published lectures, as late as 1846, he still adheres to his position, only alightly shifting his ground and contending that "steam navigation can never become general because not profitable." Great unscientific uncertainties! unscientific uncertainties!

William Makepeace Thackeray (born in 1811, died in 1883), the popular writer and satirist, appeared in Boston in 1844, I think, and gave lectures on the "Four Georges" in the old "Melodeon" on Federal St. Thackersy was a large, well-proportioned man, with a massive head, a restless, large blue eye and a pug nose. He was a diffident man, and before a large Boston assembly was evidently scared. In some letters of his, recently published in one of our maga-zines, he tells us how intensely he suffered before stepping before an audience. These lectures were interesting, not because there was anything remarkable in the character of those stupid, drunken Dutchmen, or Germans rather, but from the humorous haze thrown over them in their habits and acts. The third George was a pig-headed, obstinate, drunken fool; his wretched, reckless fooling brought on the revolution which "knocked out the finest jewel in the English crown." He died insane. The lecturer treated that imbecile with terrible, stinging satire. fourth George, the Duke of Wellington said: "He was indeed the most extraordi-nary compound of talent, wit, buffconery, obstinacy and good feeling — in short, a medley of the most opposite qualities, with a preponderance of good, that I ever saw in any character in my life." My readers will see through and over what a rich field we were led by such a magician as Thack-

Henry, Lord Broughan

This remarkable man was born in 1778, and died in 1869, aged 91 years; so that when I saw and heard him he was 72, and yet looked not more than fifty. He was a Scotchman, born in Edinburgh, and educated at its University. His orations at the trial of Queen Caroline in 1820-'21, and active interest in the abolition of the inhuman slave-trade, gave him a universal noto-

When visiting Europe in 1850, I had a strong desire to see and hear the "Mitee Broom" as a flotitious Chinese letterwriter styled him. But I found two things difficult to secure in London — an entrance to the Methodist Conference then in session the City Road Chapel, from the door of which I was coolly turned away; and admission to the Houses of Parliament. My host at No. 8 King's St., Cheapside, Mr. Randall (now dead), informed me that I must have a note from the U.S. Minister, Mr. Lawrence, or from a Peer of the realm, in order to visit the House of Lords. So I trudged off after breakfast up to 138 Piccadilly, the residence of Mr. Lawrence, very sure of the note.

"Mr. Lawrence is out of town, and will not return for two weeks," said his secre-

"Is there any power delegated here to grant such a permit?" "None," said he.

The mercury in the glass of hope dropped to the bulb.

At our dinner the subject came up again and I related my discomfiture

"You'll have to give it up," said one;

"sorry for you."
"But," said I, "I will not give it up. I must see at least Lord Brougham. I shall go home ashamed if I tail. Saturday I have arranged to leave for Paris; only one day more. I shall go in today."

A laugh rippled around the table, and some one said, -

"We shall be glad to see you after your return from your visit to the House of

"Be here at supper. I will then tell you about it. I have worked out a plan to overcome all these obstacles. I remember Lord Bacon's aphorism: 'Possible things are such as may be done by one, though not by

After dinner, at 1 P. M., I started for Westminster, strolling slowly along, in no haste, as I knew the House opened at 5 P.M. By 4.30 I was at the old Abbey in front of the Parliament House. A crowd of sightseers had gathered there to witness the assembling of the Lords. Soon I heard loud hand-clapping, and saw a solitary eman slowly coming down the street his head bent, and his body swaying to the

of a gentleman standing by me. "Lord Wellington," he replied. He rode up to the door, swung himself from the saddle, and his equerry rode up, took the animal by the bridle, and rode away. The "noble lords" meanwhile had been gathering, in all sorts of vehicles from a dog-cart to a coach-and-four. The old bell in the Abbey tolled out the hour of five, and the crowd tolled out the hour of five, and the crowd dispersed. My time had come. I had taken one of my cards, bearing my name, and un. der it had written in large letters: Bosron, UNITED STATES. I wore a single-breasted clerical coat, buttoned up to my throat, and a silk hat, and carried a green cotton umbrella. Walking briskly across the street, and assuming (what I surely did not feel) an indifferent air of business, I approached the door and inquired of the sentry stationed there,—

"Is Lord Brougham in the chamber?" "'e is, sir."

Handing him my card, I said, "Send that in to his Lordship." He opened the door and called an usher, who came down the corridor.

"Send that card to Lord Brougham," said the sentry.

He took it, and I followed him into

"Wait here," said he, and vanished. In less than two minutes out came a small-sized, quick-motioned man. I explained, and apologized, but wound up by saying: "I could not think of returning to Boston without having seen and heard, if sible, Lord Brougham."

He smiled and extended his hands, saying, " All right, sir, I will introduce you."

Then instead of ordering the usher to "take the gentleman round to the gallery," he said, "Follow me," and led this Yankee Methodist preacher in upon the floor of the House, and said, "Make yourself at home,

I was in the House of Lords! An usher soon came and spoke to me, pointing out the noted men among the grandees, who resembled a company of New England farmers met to discuss the subject of stockraising or rotation of crops. But that man I had seen on horseback was striding back and forth in the area between the benches his hands clasped behind him, and his hat thrown back on his head, which was dropped upon his breast. That nose! I have often on it referred to as remarkable, but as a nose it had no equal. "I select my marshals by their noses," said Napoleon. I wondered what the great Duke was thinking about. I know what I was thinking as he strode by me, back and forth. I was on the field of Waterloo; I heard the deafening roar of five hundred cannon, the charge of Ney's horsemen upon the square of British soldiers, the order from the lips now closely shut before me: "Up, guards, and at them!" the rout and flight to Paris. I thought of St. Helena, of Longwood, of the terrible storm on the day when that resi-less spirit left the clay, of his last words— "Head of the army!" And there walks the man who brought it about!

To return. Lord Brougham sat a few m ments as if in profound meditation, then suddenly rose, and, mounting the rostrum commenced speaking. I could hardly grasp the subject, and, indeed, he had nothing special to discuss—something about what he had proposed or intended to bring before the House. His delivery was rapid, easy, and earnest. He spoke for about twent minutes, and then returned to the "woolminutes, and then returned to the "wool-sack," no doubt saying to himself: "There my friend from Boston, that's the best I can do for you under the circumstances." He was rather under-sized, with a small but well-shaped head, a brain of the finest texture, and a nose of which writers have spoken as "long, but turned up at the end," expressive of satire and scorn.

expressive of satire and scorn.

I had seen, shaken hands with, and heard, "Henry, Lord Brougham." I was satisfied. I rose from the steps of the Queen's Throne, on which I had been sitting, thanked the genial usher, and passed out, thanking also the gentlemanly senting at the door, jumped into a bus and was st 8 King's St., Cheapside, a little after siz. The boarders were at the supper-table as I took my seat a volley of questions se

"Have you been into the Lords?"

I gravely bowed right and left. and gentlemen, I have been into the Hou of Lords - on the floor, not into the gallery. I sent my card in to Lord Br who came out and took me in, and mi speech for my personal gratification

There was a dropping of knives and forts a look of wonder and astonishme "so to supper," as old Pepys would say.

bey wd ken that sher,

o the p by ng to ard, if er to lery,"

of the

ng out s, who agland stock-

t man g back

nches, his list

eqqo

ut as a

I woninking g as he on the afening arge of British and at

at rest-

alks the en sud-ostrum,

ly grasp nothing ut what

g before d, easy, twenty

" wool-"The e best I tances." small but est text-ers have the end,"

th, and I was

d was at after six. able, and stions ashe House the gal-rougham, and made a on." and forks, nent, and ld say.

House of

vords

ARCHÆOLOGY TO THE RESCUE OF BIBLICAL HISTORY.

Rev. H. Hewitt.

TOR the man who, Proteus-like, can speak with the weight of authority, "sometimes in the character of a theologian, sometimes in that of a simple archeologist, and sometimes in that of a historologist, and sometimes in that of a historical critic," one ought to have some feeling of admiration. And these are functions recently ascribed very deservedly, though somewhat sarcastically, to that learned and most indefatigable investigator in the realm of Assyriological literature and antiquities,

Prof. A. H. Sayce,

by a fellow-laborer in a different though closely-related field of inquiry.* Of the half-dozen scholars, more or less, who are esteemed authorities in this important and fruitful region of research, few have seen a longer term of service, few have had the advantage of a completer apparatus or a larger collection of materials, few have pur-sued the whole subject of Assyriology and related lines of investigation with a more single-minded devotion, and perhaps few, if any, are capable at this moment of giving a safer verdict on any disputed point of saa safer verdict on any disputed point of sa-cred antiquity.

Notwithstanding all this, his recently-published book, "The Higher Criticism and the Verdict of the Monuments," has pro-voked a style of stricture from members of the advanced guild of Biblical scholars which sounds very much like resentment. Readers of this bold challenge will hardly be surprised either at the feeling it has swakened in the camp of progressive Old awakened in the camp of progressive Old Testament scholarship, or the satisfaction it has afforded those who still have the hardihood to "calmly speak of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and even Nimrod and Melchisedek, as if they were historical individuals who did something like what is reported of them in the Hebrew writings." † The warning to make haste slowly and risk nothing on unverifiable ground; the damaging beyond repair, or the possibility of further occupancy, of some of the leading positions of the advanced wing of critics by an array of archeological testimony hard to dispute, makes the situation one of unusual interest, and was sure to create some "searchings of heart" among those who hold the chief places in the van of Biblical scholarship and criticism. It may be true, in a limited sense, as Lessing said, that "historical facts being accidental and often uncertain, can have no close connection with spiritual religion;" but, on the other hand, a spiritual religion built on assumptions in open and obvious conflict with historical facts could not be expected long to hold the respect and confidence of mankind. It is, therefore, not easy to overrate the importance of a work which undertakes to

Lay Bare the Historic Basis of Old Testament

Religion,

and so triumphantly to proclaim its soundness and strength as to compel the Babel of modern critical skepticism to pay attention. Writing his pages in Egypt, in the very presence of many of the colossal witnesses he subpceas in the interest of revealed truth, his facts and arguments have that delightful dogmatism of conviction which is the legitimate offspring of thorough personal investigation and knowledge. It is conclusively shown that the historic elements in Genesis, which a too confident criticism has argued could not have been available to the writers of that ancient and interesting document in its present form. modern critical skepticism to pay attention. interesting document in its present form, may really have been easy of access centuries before the Exodus. The recently exhumed Tel-el-Amarna tablets, as well as the results of earlier excavations elsewhere in the East, have shown that "The culture of the East had been literary from the remotest epoch to which we can trace it back. The monuments it has yielded to us are for the most part written monuments. Baby-lonia and Assyria were filled with libraries, and the libraries were filled with thousands of books, while the Egyptian could not even hew a tomb out of the rock without covering its walls with lines of writing." The revelations of the past, made by the excavator's tool of late years under the eye and by the compel the belief that "there is nothing impossible in history any more than there is in science." It is only needful to bear in mind that the early books of Scripture were not "written by German scholars surrounded by the volumes of their libraries and writing in awe of the reviewers."
Plentiful as historical materials must have been, the task of handling brick-slab docu-

Prof. T. K. Cheyne, Oxford, in New World for June.

Koyunjik, not to speak of documents on colossal monoliths and pillars and temple walls and the face of rocky cliffs, would pre-sent a difficulty to the ancient compiler not to be overlooked, while the simplicity of his age, or his own specific purpose in writing, would lead to brevities of statement and omissions of fact which the hypercriticism of today is apt to hastily and ignorantly construe as errors.

Of the prevalence of literary cultivation in the early Eastern world, notably under the domination of the cunelform or Babylonian system of writing, the author of the "Verdict of the Monuments" finds Suggestive Traces in the Hexatsuch Itself.

It has long been the fashion of criticism to point to the fact of the absence of any written inscriptions which could be dated so early as the age of Solomon, while most of those which were known "belong to the epoch of the Ptolemies," as a proof of the impossibility of a written record as early as that satisfied to the book of General The impossibility of a written record as early as that assigned to the book of Genesis. The name, Kirjath-Sepher, however, "City of Books," and its alternative designation, Kirjath-Sanni, "City of Instruction," and Beth-Sanni, "House of Instruction," together with the remarkable discovery of brick documents on the site of the abandoned capital of Amenophis IV. of the eighteenth dynasty, planty point to the eighteenth dynasty, plainly point to the possibility of deriving most of the episodes and stories connected with the dawn of human history from written and authentic sources. The argument for the very high antiquity of the historic elements of Geneantiquity of the historic elements of Genesis becomes stronger still in the light of the constantly accumulating information derived from the cunciform literature of Babylonia. Tablets containing fragments of poems, some of them dating as far back as the 23d century before Christ, substantiate all the leading facts of early human history. The production of the world, the creation of man, the planting of a garden eastward of Eden, the Fall, the Flood, the building of the Ark, with the details of its history from the rising to the subsidence of the waters and its resting on Mt. Ararat, the construction of Babel, the confusion of tongues, the dispersion of the nations, the tongues, the dispersion of the nations, the much-discredited stories of Nimrod and Melchisedek and Chedorlaomer (Kudar-lagamar of the British Museum slabs), all-find extended mention or definite reference and extended mention or definite reference in the literature of rocks, slabs, bricks, cylinders, monuments and pillars, and walls of palaces and sanctuaries, which modern archeological research is slowly exhuming from their ancient grave and making vocal with an unexpected but potent testimony.

The "Higher Criticism," as such, thus finds by the side of it a science developing along lines for the most part parallel with along lines for the most part parallel with its own, with whose findings it will have to reckon, and to whose conclusions it will be obliged, in the long run, to adjust its own positions. For archeology, as resting more on positive and verified facts and less on hypothesis and conjecture, will always have a clear advantage over criticism which is obliged to build more or less on probability. Higher critics who have taken advance negative positions without due warrant from the present state of critical knowledge, seem disposed to take alarm at the presence and pretensions of this "auditor of their accounts." Cheyne and Driver— the latter in the Contemporary Review for March, 1894— both seem to realize the dif-March, 1894 — Dots seem to reaster the thi-ficulty as well as necessity of explanation and apology in view of the latest utterances of archeological science. Still, it is surely better that there should be this division of labor even with the risk of a diversity of result in the study and investigation of questions so intimately bound up with the sovereign interests of truth and religion.

Woodford's, Me.

HONESTY PURE AND SIMPLE.

Elizabeth E. Backup.

E suppose that to be scrupulously honest is to be honest in the smallest minutie of life. Sometimes people who are in the main conscientious and reliable surprise us by an unexpected laxity in the "small things."
A friand a characteristic sur-

A friend, a church member in good and regular standing, and a respected teacher in the Sunday-school, calmly tells us that she never pays a fare in the electric car for her nore than five years; b sooth, the conductors never ask for his fare, supposing him to be less than five years of age. Where would this sort of reasoning lead to if applied to life in general? A person takes a sail down the harbor and inadvertently his ticket is not collected; instead of profering it to the official, he reserves it to pay his fare upon the home trip. A postage stamp which has accidentally passed through the post-office without being canceled, has, within the memory of man, been taken off and caused to do duty upon other mall matter. We would greatly shock the persons who are guilty of these and similar deeds, if we accused them of being dishonest. They would perhaps see no harm in taking advantage of the carelessness of an official and making it a source of petty gain to themselves. And yet, upon sober second thought, is such behavior honesty pure and simple, or does it have a decided Ananias and Sapphira flavor?

There are men in business, with a reputation for honest dealing, who yet condescend to various small means of turning "an honest penny." They are full of expedients, est penny." They are full of expedients, tricky, crafty, and by and by some of them astonish their friends and business acquaintances by what seems a sudden and great lapse from honesty. Any one who had care-fully observed their operations would have known that the lapse was less sudden than it seemed.

Should not uncompromising honesty be our own practice and the sturdy virtue which we should seek to inculcate in others?

When a spirit of wholesome integrity personner. vades character, there is no corner or crevice in life where its influence is unfelt. And in this connection it is always well to re-member that it is the "little foxes that spoil

The Still Hour.

Heart-Inspectore.

There was a persevering inclination, in such good men as Payson, Edwards, Brainerd and James B. Taylor, to be constantly inspecting their hearts, that they might see how bad they were. And what was the result? Read their biographies and observe that they were full of dolefulest lamentations over their natural depravity, their great sins and terrible weaknesses. Much of the time they seem to have been miscrable saints. Now, while we believe that Christians ought to set a watch over their hearts and diligently cultivate them, yet we are thoroughly persuaded that it is a sickly business to be constantly inspecting one's heart, either to see how good or how bad it is. The better way is to keep the heart busy for God and men.

Free from Sin.

This is a Pauline phrase. Many good Christians have been perplexed by it. They have regarded it as an unattainable experience in this life. But really all true Christians are free from sin, in the sense intended by Paul. He says: "Being made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness" (Rom. 6:18, R. V.). These Christians had been "servants" of unrighteousness, but now, by the power of Christ, they were freed from that servitude—freed from the law and dominion of sin. They had been under bondage to Satan; now they were free from that. They were the Lord's freemen, yet "servants of righteousness." They had been under the law of sin; now they were under the law of holiness, of life, of love. And this is blessedly true of every child of God.

Tell your bad feelings to others. We are not of that class of wise Christians who advise their brethren and sisters to keep all of their bad feelings to themselves and put forth only the best and brightest to others. A careful study of human nature reveals the fact that there are times when, if a despondent soul could be told by another such an one how he feels, it would help him amazingly. A Christian lady, years ago, was lamenting the fact that she never could tell the time when she became a Christian. This led her to doubt that she was a Christian. A minister met her, and in course of the conversation told her he never could point to the day of his conversion, he was so young at the time. The woman greatly brightened at this statement, saying she never met another like herself in this respect. It is strengthening to know the trials and troubles of others.

Keep At ft.

It is a mystery to some people that certain Christians, whose natural talents are evidently ordinary, should be so able in expressing themselves in prayer and testimony; but there is no mystery about it. They have simply kept diligent in such sort of work. When they began praying and speaking in public, they were very limited in power of expression. It was with great difficulty that they performed these duties, but they need every conceitming to rever and great difficulty that they performed these duties, but they used every opportunity to pray and testify, and their progress was a marvel to themselves and others. They put their few talents to constant, unfinching use, and the legitimate consequence was, their talents soon doubled and then trebled. And just such a course will bring its rewards to every Christian.

Limited Sympathy.

The great reason why some people do not and cannot sympathize with certain other people is because of a radioal difference in temperaments. rson of heavy, phiegmatic, te annot sympathise with one of a quick, highly ensitive, nervous temperament. The cool, toical Christian criticises, with great severity, stoical Christian criticises, with great severity, sometimes, his nervous, impulsive brother. The former says there is no use of the lakter's being so testy and sensitive. But the fact is, the phiegmatic brother is unatterably barred from truly sympathising with his impulsive, delicately organized brother, and not even God's grace will remove the impediment. We need to take a common-sense view of our limitations and treat each other accordingly.

God's Promises.

God's Framisse.

A terrible strain is put by some people on some of God's promises. They make entirely too much of them. Meanings are put upon them which God never warranted. Here is one them: "Ank what ye will and it shall be done unto you." Another promises is: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Both promises were made by Christ. Now some insist that these promise, if believed in with all the heart, will surely fe faifilled in every instance. Not so. These promises have vital relation to other and qualifying passages and conditions. The praying promises have vital relation to other and quali-tying passages and conditions. The praying must be in harmony with God's will, and one part or feature of His will is that we should forgive those who sin against us. Let us take heed that we do not abuse God's promises. He is jealous of His Word.

Head Purity

Mend Purity.

A great deal has been said of the importance of heart purity, and this is well; but is it not equally important that we should have head purity? We think it is. We suspect that some have dwelt so absorbingly on the question of heart purity that they have quite overlooked the imperative need of head purity. Too many Christians have foolishly thought that if the heart were only right, it mattered but little whether the head was right or wrong. The truth is, no heart can be pure without a pure mind. Nor can one's heart be pure while the mind is largely filled with ignorant and gross ideas of God, of Christ, and His truth. The prime meaning of purity is clearness. Hence there must be clearness of head in order to clearness or purity of heart. It is folly to say that one may have a pure heart while his head is fall of error.

Ne Condemnation.

It is a joyous comfort to know that every true child of God is free from the law of condemnation. But not a few Christians have confused ideas of what Paul means when he says, "There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." He ness a legal term. Let us illustrate: A criminal is condemned to be executed for his crime, but before the day for his execution comes the governor pardons him. He is now under no condemnation. The law which condemned him lets him go free. The sinner is a criminal. He is under condemnation by the law of God. He begs for mercy, repents of his sins, God pardons him for Christ's sake, and be is no longer under condemnation. He is a free mas in Christ. And yet he may do things for which his conscience condemns him.

CHURCH HOOK & HASTINGS CO.
Bostos and New York.
Established in 1887.

THE PROOTER & GAMULE CO., CHPTL

John H. Pray, Sons & Co., nglan St. (opp. Boylston), Boston.

WHAT OF THE WEST?

THE West is so large that generalizations concerning it are apt to contain as much falsehood as truth. The generalization may be true of the Northwest, but not of the Southwest. It may be correct concerning a fraction of a State, but not concerning the State as a whole. The changes are so numerous and rapid that the con-ditions may change almost before documents can be printed and circulated giving facts or can be printed and circulated giving faces of fictions. Reliable data alone ought to be pub-lished, but the desire to arrest attention and attract population is so great that imagination too often is allowed to do its perfect work. The West is beginning to realize that

Booming Does Not Pay,

if permanent welfare rather than transient ad-vantage is sought. Sooner or later the balloon collapses, and if a few are benefited, the many suffer. The suffering occasioned is severe. Restoffer. The suffering occasioned is severe.

Disconseness contributes to the same result. Discontent and lonesomeness provoke a desire to try a new country or exploit a different experience. Occupations are shapeed Occupations are changed as well as locality. Many farmers, for example, are former butchers and cab-drivers from the greater cities, whose only knowledge of farming was obtained in abattoirs and of stock farms in driving horses. It is a proverb along the Atlantic coast that a suc-cessful ship-master will fail as a landsman in cessful ship-master will fail as a landsman in business of any kind. The exceptions are rare. Similar conditions in the West produce similar

The best immigrants among those who speak a foreign language are the Germans and the Scandinavians, especially the Norwegians among the Scandinavians. Most of the Germans and practically all of the Scandinavians are strongly testant. They are hardy, industrious, eco-ical, independent, and patient. Hence they successful. Many who had just enough bey to reach their destination have speedily aired a competence and a position that would a been impossible in their native land.

Eastern Money

is placed in the West to a surprising degree. There are instances of sharp dealing that have gathered in the proverbially shrewd Yankee and the wise and superior Bostonian. A Boston syndicate, for example, which was composed of resident and suburban Bostonians, came to a town of 2,600 inhabitants, were feted at the hotel, and hoodwinked by the fletitious and temporary occupation, in anticipation of their coming, of all the vacant stores and the hurrying to and fro of all available wagons filled with empty boxes. The result was that the impression acquired was based not upon reality, but upon fletten. Land was sold to the syndicate for five times its market value, and the excuse rendered to the citizens of the place was that it was a battle of wits and the battle would be repeated in the East between the natives of the East.

The seisure of government land when reserva-tions are opened is made under nominal compil-ance with the law. A claim will be taken, a shanty built, occupied one night, and stored with household utensils sufficient to provide a meal when visited for purposes of inspection. Citisens supposed to be reputable do not hesitate to take oaths which a strictly honest man would hesitate to take, lest he should perjure himself. Where the people come from when a boom is on or a reservation is to be opened, is a mystery; where they disappear when a decline or a col-lapse comes, is equally a mystery. The seizure of government land when reserva on the average, so far as morality and religion are concerned, are lower than in the older States. This is especially true of the relations between the sexes, the laws of marriage and divorce. Some of the newer States are making a serious mistake in railroading divorces through the courts after a ninety days' residence. Living on the vices and weaknesses of humanity is post business anywhere. The Dakotas are rigid about prohibition of the liquor traffic and lax about sundering the marriage relation. Prohibitory law is enforced in the rural districts and the smaller towns. It is openly violated in the citsmaller towns. It is openly violated in the cit-ies, some of which contain no more than 2,500 inhabitants. The saloon, or the brewery, however, is selden secure, even in such places. Tol-evation and apathy have their limits. High li-cense is not a good phrase to conjure with any longer, whatever its merits or demerits as a ionger, whatever its merits or demeries as a method of dealing with the liquor traffic. The resources for education in the public schools, the agricultural colleges and the State environments are enormous. The school lands schools, the agricultural colleges and the State universities are snormous. The school lands are so vast and valuable that they make a low tax for educational funds, and their value is increasing steadily. The East is depended upon as yet for the best teachers. Minnesota's State University is very superior. President Northrop was formerly professor of English literature in Yale College.

Ministers and Churches

are fighting a hard yet good fight, within and without. The ministerial weakling or fraud has a freer field in the West than in the East. He is tolerated in some parts of the West, even after his doubtful character or spotted reputation is known. If he can arrest attention, crowd a building by his extravagances, his appeal to the curiosity or emotionalism of the multitude, or his censoriousness of ministers and churches, he will find supporters enough in the community to compromise the church and especially its grieved and protesting remnant. The hescolam of the home missionaries and of some of the home missionary churches is deserving of all praise. They sacrifice comforts, pay large interest, accommodate themselves to times of depression, persecute law-breakers, especially the violators of the Hquor laws, and win a place deserving of such pesies as is given to the church in Bardis or Pergamum. Occasionally they are able to make good financial investments. Debts are common, but they liquidate their debts with comparative rapidity. The churches are apt to promise the ministors more than they can fulfill. Their impulses and hopes outrun their judgment and ability. A distinguished minister, who has had an Eastern and Western experience, writes me:

hopes outrun their judgment and ability.

A distinguished minister, who has had an Eastern and Western experience, writes me:

"We are in a transition state. It is not a comfortable period for ministers nor a successful period for churches, as they are now managed. I do not know a thorough, carnest pastor who is satisfied. Many are sore discouraged. Secularism has corrupted the people. It is hard work to get a man now and then to 'seek first the kingdom of God. Denominationalism is a curse. Churches all through this West are estranged because they are competing for the patronage of the all through this West are estranged because they are competing for the patronage of the best people in each town. Our home missionary secretaries have a godly anxiety for statistics. But the kingdom of God will come. We will find our way to better methods and means. X—is prostrate. But the people are trying to pull through without a flat failure. So far they have kept on their feet by prodigious slack rope balancing."

The Presbyterians and Commencationalists.

esbyterians and Congregationalists hemselves so near of kin as to forbid the entrance of the one church where a church of the other order aiready exists. Comity between them avoids overlapping. Methodists and Episcopalisms are ready to ideate anywhere. and Episcopalisms are ready to locate anywhere. Methodists are everywhere. Episcopalians are scarce. There seems to be an adaptation of the denominational types to temperaments of human nature, and the law of of natural selection prevails as a law of affiliation and of exclusion. Some people will attend the church of their choice and antecedents, who will not attend any prevails as a law of affiliation and of exclusion. Some people will attend the church of their choice and antecedents, who will not attend any other. This is the only plausible apology for the multiplication of churches, of dependent churches, in relatively small communities. If the wealth of the West were consecrated, the number of home missionary churches would be speedly reduced.

Exchanges of minimum the churches would be

number of nome missionary caurenes would be speedily reduced.

Exchanges of ministers between the East and the West are increasing. Exchanges between ministers for vacations are multiplying. The missionaries yearn for ministerial fellowship, the literary atmosphere, the sight of public libraries, the rest which comes from a change of scene and conditions. The Eastern minister, once naturalized, is not a promising leader for the West. Three Eastern Congregationalists have returned East within the last six months, after pastorates of less than three years each in one of the largest and most beautiful cities in the Northwest. They were successful in the East, and they will be again. They were not failures in the West. Two of them are young pastors. No better nor worse reason is given for their return than that the East is good enough for them.

"Go West," therefore, is

Advice to be Taken with Caution.

ther the object be fortune or fame, or the Christian propagandism. Success is contin-gent. It is by no means certain in any walk of life, nor is it uniform. Emigration in hard times is seidom warranted. The times are harder in the agricultural and mining West than in the manufacturing East. Omaha, that has in-creased from 16,000 inhabitants in 1870 to 140,000 creased from 16,000 inhabitants in 1870 to 140,000 in 1890, is depressed now. Duluth and West Superior, in Minnesota—practically one city and the Chicago of the Northwest— is arrested in its rapid career. Denver increased 254 per cent. In the last ten years; but although not destitute of silver or gold, it is in a state of arrested development. The Colorado Magasine, a new literary enterprise located in Denver, has suspended publication. These States and their cities are still ready to proclaim what they excities are still ready to prociaim what they ex-pect to be and to do in 1900, but seriously they are doubtful what they will be and do in 1894. Lincoln, Nebraska, has 23 sects and denomina-Lincoin, Nebraska, has 23 sects and denomina-tions, and compulsory comity may be inevita-ble. It will be a cold year for speculative the-ology in the West, where practical theology hitherto has held and won the day. Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord are needed and wanted as seldom wanted before.

A PILGRIMAGE TO ZENKOJI, THE MECCA OF JAPAN.

Rev. Henry B. Schwartz

A T Nagano, in the province of Shinshiu, stands the

Famous Temple of Zenkoji,

whither, according to popular Buddhist super stition, everybody in Japan must make at least stition, everybody in Japan must make at least one pligrimage or else his soul must make one after his death. The trip after death must be attended with unusual difficulties, for either fore-bodings of the future or the enjoyment of the present send some ten thousand pligrims to Zenkoji every year. Karuizawa, where we spent our summer, is near enough to Nagano to feel the full force of this pligrim travel, and it was the most natural thing in the world to resolve that I, too, would make a pligrimage to Zenkoji.

the most natural thing in the world to resolve that I, too, would make a pligrimage to Zenkoji. Pilgrimages in Japan are not the painful affairs they are in India. The Japanese pilgrim does not hesitate to ride on the cars if he can afford it, so I might have gone to Nagano in three hours by railroad; but that could hardly be called a pilgrimage. Our pilgrimage shall be on foot around the base of Asama Yama, our big, smoky neighbor, past the famous hot springs of Kusateu, the volcano of Shirane San, and the pretty little spa of Shibu, to Nacetsu on the Sea of Japan, and thence back to Nagano.

I left Karulsawa early in the morning with a small satchel on my back, a stick in my hand, small satchel on my back, a stick in my hand, and the native straw sandals on my feet. In the village I found a jinrikisha man who took me as far as the first village. When he found that I was going alone and for the first time, my man was untiring in his efforts to tell me the road He told me the names of all the towns and ex-plained all the turns I must make, but, as is usually the case, be told me so much I could not remember half of the towns nor any of the turns. However, a little way beyond I overtook a young Japanese going my way and he answered quite as well as a paid guide.

quite as well as a paid guide.

The first two or three miles were up a steep hill, where the white scoris which composed the road made me think of Ocean Avenue in Newburyport. The road took us almost to the base of Ko Asama — "Baby Asama" — as the knobshaped projection on the side of the great volcano. From here the road to the summit of the mountain leads off to the left. But climbing Asams was a pilgrimage in itself, so we did not allow the three thousand feet of climbing be-tween us and its summit to tempt us.

A hundred and ten years ago, Asama had its

Last Great Eruption,

and our road now led across the wilderness caused by it. As far as we could see the whole plain was covered with rocks, blackened and reddened by intense heat. The dust was black and hot, and the walking exceedingly uncomfortable. How deep the stuff lay I had no means of determining but where the wind had any fortable. How deep the stuff lay I had no means of determining, but where the wind had uprooted a tree the same red and black sand could be seen clinging to the roots; and the bottom of the hole had the same appearance as the surface of the ground. The whole width of this descolated region little images of Kwannon, the goddess of mercy, were set up by the side of the road, at regular intervals, about 120 yards apart; authors to prevent another catestrophe. I suppose to prevent another catastrophe. eral villages once stood here, but I saw onl es in four or five miles. I could not or two houses in four or five miles. I could not help thinking of the words of the Psalmist: "Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolations He hath made in the earth!"

Getting out of this wilderness, we entered a tract which the guide-book appropriately calls "park like." It reminded me of the rolling country in Champaign and Union counties in Ohio. There was the same abundance of grass and clumps of trees, but one missed the same Ohio. There was the same abundance of grass and clumps of trees, but one missed the substantial farm-houses and the cattle and sheep resting in the shade. The flowers were something wonderful. Lemon, tiger, day lilies and a large, blue, lily-shaped flower vied with each other to see whether the prevalent color of the fields should be yellow, red, white or blue.

When we reached the first town, my companion must have taken a short cut, for the reach when we reached the first town, my compan-ion must have taken a short cut, for the road, which at Ko Asama had been so wide that three or four wagons could have gone abreast, here became a mere path through the rice fields, and could only be followed by much inquiring on the part of my guide. At Kanewo, th At Kanewo, the last little town before Ku-satsu, I was glad to close a bargain for a horse for the remaining three ri. But when the horse appeared I was both amused and astonished. I have never ridden a camel, but that horse was as near it as one could come without having the real article. His head drooped until his nose almost touched the ground and the saddle was as high as a camel's back. First came two huge straw pads at least a foot thick, above them a wooden saddle a foot higher, and over all a big blue comforter. My barganes was tied to one blue comforter. My baggage was tied to one side of the saddle, but that made things lopsided like the pumpkin in the end of the boy sack. That famous individual settled the matt by putting a stone in the other end; but in this case a new shickirin, or cooking brazier, was wrapped up in straw and used in its place. Think of using a cooking-stove to balance one's hand baggage! The question of ascent coming next, the landlord, after much discussion, produced a strong cask about four feet high; and since the horse would not kneel for me, camel-lashion, I climbed up to him by way of that cask. A camel or pack-horse presumes a man to lead it, but in this case the man proved to be a woman. She was a talkative little body, who knew almost everybody and had a word for everybody she met whether she knew them or since the horse would not kneel for me, or overyoody she met whether she knew them or not. She chattered away to me regardless of the fact that I could not understand more than one word in fifty that she said. She was twenty-five years old, had been married a long time, and had three children — two boys and one girl. About half-past five we reached and I was quartered for the night in a little deand I was quariered for the might will age, ached cottage at the far end of the village, nitirely removed from the sick people who make quarter so undesirable. I was told that there Kusatsu so undesirable. I was told that there were over two thousand in the village, includ-were over two thousand in the village, including a large colony of lepers.

Of course the first thing was a bath. The Japanese are the greatest bathers in the world. They take their baths hot, seldom under 110 degrees, and immerse themselves in them almost up to their eyes. At least once a day is ordinary up to their eyes. At least once a day is ordinary but to a what it is a like Kusatan they are in routine, but at a place like Kusatsu they are in hot water all the time. The baths at Kusatsu are perhaps, the hottest in Japan, and even the Japanese, inured as they are to hot water, shrink from them. At our house there were two, side by side, one said to be lukewarm and the other hot. The so-called "lukewarm" bath was as hot as any I had ever taken, but stepping out of

SELECT SONGS NO. 2.
By F. N. PRICURET, D. D., and HUBERT P. MAIN, for the devotional meeting and the Sunday-school.
Cloth, 840 per 108. SUNNY-SIDE SONGS.

By Dr. W. H. Doane. Fresh, sparkling, wide-awake Sunday-school music. Boards, $30 per 100.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., 76 E 9th. St., New York. 215 Wabash Av., Chicago

THE BIBLE IN SONG & STORY PRACTICAL ANTHEMS, Vol. 4 COSPEL SONG CANDIDATES 90 DAILY VOCAL EXERCISES 77 BEETHOVEN STUDIES

OUTING SONGS

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.

the hot bath into it, it seemed almost cool. The water is beautifully clear, with a slightly greenish tings. It is so strong with sulphur, arsenle and other mineral acids as to be satringent to the taste and so acrid that one is warned not to let taste and so acrid that one is warned not to let it get into the eyes.

Bath over, supper came: mountain trout, nicely broiled, and a good chassus mush, a kind of stew—"steamed in a bowl," the name means. The ingredients of which it is composed vary, but the method of preparation is always the same, and the resultant is always served piping hot. The invariable hotness of the chaces mush; is the more remarkable from the fact that the Japanese seem to have no idea of their food hot. Often they let their meals stand after they are prepared until everything is cold.

At seven o'clock the next morning I was in the

At seven o'clock the next morning I was in the saddle. In the saddle this time, for it was a foreign saddle. On the saddle is the proper expression for the stirrupless, native article. We went up, up, up, for an hour and a half, then turned to the left and by an easy ascent were at the #### Summit of Shirane San.

6,500 feet above the sea and 3,000 feet above Ku-satsu. Shirane San is one of Japan's eighteen or still active volcanoes, and only so late as 1889 it was in a state of eruption. The guide-book says one can ride right into the crater without dismounting; but it also says there are no mosquitoes in Kusatsu, and I could have produced twenty witnesses to the contrary. However, I think it is a case of can and may; However, I think it is a cese of can and may; for I saw nothing to hinder except that the road was taken up by a tramway carrying crude sulphur from the crater to a reducing house by the side of which we tied the horse. The sulphur leaves here in the form of cylinders about two feet long and a foot in diameter. Tons of it were lying in the shed waiting to be carried down the mountain. A short walk took us through the opening in the side into the bowlshaped depression, in the centre of which lay a boiling lake of sulphur. I could not see into it for the steam which was blown into my face, but at one side the hot air and steam were rushing out with tremendous force and a noise like ing out with tremendous force and a noise like Coming down from Shirane San, we began a long climb to the Shibu Pass. Here I saw an other method of locomotion — riding cow back The cows were good-looking creatures, and I The cows. were good-looking creatures, and I dare say they rode well enough; but a perhaps overstrained idea of gallantry made the thought repugnant to me. It was bad enough to ride and let a woman lead my horse, but to ride a cow! I passed at least fifty people riding that way, and at one of our stopping places so many were resting that the field by the side of the inn looked like a dark farm. like a dairy farm. At this place they had a strong new step-ladder to use in place of the cask from which I had mounted the day before. The descent from the summit of the pass to the

Village of Shibu

is long and steep, and it was about 3 o'clock when I dismounted in front of the Tsubataya when I dismounted in front of the Tsubstaya Inn. Shibu is another watering-place. The waters here are delightfully soft, so that the place is much visited as an "after cure" by those who have been taking the baths at Kusatsu. It lies 2,250 feet above the sea and is one of the cleanest little places I have seen in Japan. Mine host of the Tsubstays was assiduous in his efforts to make me comfortable. He took me up to see the temple, sent me some preserved grapes to see the temple, sent me some preserved grapes with my morning cup of tea, and brought me a kind of fruit jelly which, with some kasuteira
—the native sponge cake — made a very good dessert. Then as a last and greatest favor, the the native sponge cake—made a very good dessert. Then as a last and greatest favor, the host produced an English book, an account of Perry's expedition, which he said had been given him by a gentleman in Yokohama. He could not read a word in it, but he was just as proud of its possession as if he could.

The Japanese use the word basha to mean any kind of a vehicle drawn by a horse, from a street car to a pleasure cart; but the word usually represents a kind of fourth-class omnibus, springless and uncomfortable, having only one merit—the fare is low. But from Shibu to Toyono the fare by basha and the fare by jimrikisha is the same. The Japanese, who of course make up the vast majority of the guests at Shibu, must put the sociability of the basha over against the comfort of the jimrikisha and so call matters even. The jimrikisha is so incomparably more comfortable that without a moment's healtation I chose it as the vehicle in which to do the three ri and more to Toyono station. There was some doubt as to my being able to catch the train, so I offered my man ten cents extra if he succeeded in getting me to it out time. He ran splendidly for the first ri and a half, carrying me down the beautiful valley at a rate that would have done credit to a good horse. But as rying me down the beautiful valley at a rate that would have done credit to a good horse. But as train time came nearer, he seemed to lose hope, then courage, and then strength, and for the next ri he could hardly get along at all. At last, however, the telegraph poles came in sight, my man scarcely able to get along at a walk, and I walking to rest him. The railroad was not the him. station — that was nearly a mile beyond. But the flag woman (women monopolize that occu-pation out here) tells my man that the train d. In an instant I am hurried into the jinrikisha and the man is trotting off as t rily as at first. On we go, courage quickened by every inquiry, until we bring up breathless at the station. The train, which is half an hour late, will not be in for ten minutes yet, and amid the congratulations of the crowd of jinrikisha my man pockets his reward. om Toyono to Naoetsu is a descent of two that I could see but little. We come now out of the Province of Shinshiu into that of Etchigo. This region is exposed to key winds direct free Siberia and in the winter the snow accumula Siberia and in the winter the snow accumulates to the depth of ten feet and most of the houses are provided with a covered way along the front for use when the snow lies deep in the streets. I had scarcely gotten into my room at Naoetsu when a girl, and shortly after a boy, came in with middes cme, a kind of sweet paste made from millet. It was put up in neat packages to be taken home for presents. Japanese travelers are accustomed to bring something home to each member of their families and to all their friends. These presents, which are called miage, are generally of the article, usually of food or confectionery, for which the place is noted, called its metoutsu.

Two or three miles out of Naoetsu is a little

Two or three miles out of Nacetau is a little watering-place called Gochi where I spent a pleasant day in a presty tea-house with the waves of the Sea of Japan breaking at my feet.

Three hours' ride by rail, in the afternoon, brought me to Nagano, the goal for which I had started. When Rev. Mr. De lan, the Canadian Methodist missionary, await to Nagano, his servants were congratulated by their associates on the prospect of living in such a holy place on the prospect of living in such a holy place—
"It was next to going to heaven." The place, however, had none of the sanctity which such however, had none of the sanctity which such celestial neighborhood would lead one to expect. The crowd of pilgrims, the runners for the hotels crying the merits of their houses, and the hurry and bustle everywhere, made it seem very much like a Western town. The temple enshrines a small golden image, said to have been made by Shakamuni himself. This image, after various vicissitudes in China and Korea, was brought to Japan A. D. 552, and found a resting place in Zenkoji, A. D. 602. The present temple was erected in 1701. It has little interest, its decorations are gaudy, and the whole place is dingy and dirty.

But I have seen nothing in Japan more interesting than the crowd of worshipers who thronged the temple at four o'clock in the morning. They were largely old people, men and women about equally divided, and they had and women about equally divided, and they are an air of earnestness which I had not seen in any an air of earnestness which I had not seen in any other temple in Japan. I got as near the great altar as I could and listened to the choir of priests keeping time to their chant by rhyth-mical beating of drums. The drumming grew fast and furious as the chant grew louder, and when the high priest in his scarlet robes apwhen the high priest in his scarlet robes ap-peared, priests and people joined with him in it, simply calling, over and over, the name of Buddha. At last the gorgeous brocade curtain was slowly rolled up, disclosing the outer one of the seven boxes in which the sacred image is kept. There was a moment of breathless west. There was a moment of breathless excitement, every one standing on tip-toe to get a good view, and then the curtain fell and the pligrimage to and then the curtain fell and the pligrimage to Zenkoji was accomplished.

Not until one sees these great temples, hoary with antiquity and woven into the very fabric of Japanese life, legend and history, can the stupendous work of missions be appreciated. As I saw this town, created and kept prosperous by its concourse of pligrims, I thought of another city with a famous temple, and how when the growth of Christianity threatened to cut off their gains, the craftsmen who lived by the temple were filled with zeal for it and cried about the space of two hours, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" The Book of Acts finds its best commentary in modern mission fields. mmentary in modern mission fields

Tsukiji, Tokyo.

Richmond Camp-Ground.

Rev. Wm. S. Jones

O ITTING in my study chair as the glow of the July sun sends its warm breath through the air, now redolent of new-mown hay, my mind wanders in reminiscence down the years; and as I reckon back twenty-five of them I find myself I reckon back twenty-five of them I find myself in imagination and memory under the rich foliage of forcest trees, throwing grateful umbrage over a vast concourse of people listening in rapt attention — now melted into tears, anon shouting for joy — as the preacher on the camp-ground at Richmond, Maine, discourses of the love of God in Christ Jesus, shows the pentient sinner the way to the Cross to find peace and joy in believing, and the saint a desper peace and a higher joy in the same way of believing.

The preacher has gone. He and others then present have entered into rest. A few yet remain—

The preacher has gone. He and others then present have entered into rest. A few yet remain—Randall, C. F. Allen, Munger, still linger in the radiance of a Christian's eventide, looking to and for the glory beyond. The vast crowds have changed, both in their appearance and numbers; the many have passed to the uplands of the everlasting hills. They who remain have changed. lasting hills. They who remain have changed. They, then of stalwart form and strength, are either bowed and bent, or with heads bespread with gray forerunners of approaching departure, wait the summons home. They, then young, in the bloom of their youth, with no shadow darkening their path, have found their way checked with above their lives the state of erred with change, their lives fraught with ill they never anticipated, and void of much good of which they fondly dreamed.

But amid the changes incident to human life and history the camp-ground remains in its na-tive beauty amid settings of the meandering Kennebec, edged with ice-houses snowy white and farms nestling on its banks—its sur-face here nearly a half-mile wide, dotted with passing steamer, schooner, sloon and have passing steamer, schooner, sloop and boat — on the one hand, and its background of forest trees of gigantic size and graceful form on the other. Oak and beech and maple and birch, with here and there the deeper evergreen of pine and h lock, still afford shelter from the hest and charm for those of esthetic tasts.

Beautiful for situation, it is also easy of access. The Maine Central Railroad makes the pessage easy and pleasant from Portland, Lewiston and Banger, and the ride along the shore of the Kennebec spreads out before the traveler a panorama of more than ordinary attractiveness. The boats from Boston—both the "Sagadahoo" and "Kennebec"—land passengers at Richmond, only three miles below, whence they can come by rail to the ground in ten minutes. Pure water is abundant. Lodging is supplied by the Association in nest, clean and comfortable rooms. Board is supplied by the superintendent, both good and cheep. The ground itself is divided into avenues radiating from a central circle, disclosing more than a hundred cottages pretty and nestly furnished. The auditorium will seat more than a thousand people. In time of storm or extreme heat shelter can be had under the canopy of a tabernacle seating a thousand persons.

had under the canopy of a tabernacle seating a thousand persons.

These grounds, affording such facilities for worship and enjoyment, have a history repiete with thrilling incidents. Here in 1866 the first meeting was held, favored with the presence and aid of Rev. D. B. Randall, Asron Sanderson, "Camp-meeting" John Allen, and others, and was a season of power not yet forgotten. Here, too, in subsequent years, Inskip, McDonald, W. Booth, L. R. Dunn, McLean, Pomercy, George Pratt, Morse and Munger ministered and prayed and trlumphed. Later, B. and C. F. Allen led the hosts of God, and Wetherbee, E. T. Adams, Ladd, Lindsay, Palmer and Hanscom won victo-Ladd, Lindsay, Palmer and Hansoom won vioto-ries for the church and Christ. And what shall we say of Day, Sanderson, Pottle, Luce, Sterling, Bradlee, Jewell, Prince, Williams, Libby, Brown and Besse—mon versatile in method, chaste in style, and mighty in faith? Then men trembled, wept, and cried for mercy, sought and found peace and purity and power, and went home to work mightily for God.

The grounds are the same; the Gospel is the same; the same Power is available and needed. Let us who gather there seek and obtain it, and results of the same character may be expected and realized.

This year the meeting will begin on Thursday evening, August 10. This and the meetings of the three following days—Friday, Saturday and Sunday — will be led by Rev. I. T. Johnson, who will be assisted by his wife, mother and sister, as well as by the ministers present. From the 20th to 20th inclusive, brethren of the Conference, will present mornings and afternoons.

such to such inclusive, prethren of the Conference will preach mornings and afternoous, helped by Mr. Johnson. The evening meetings in the tabernacie will be led by Miss Emma Erickson, a devoted worker from Waterville; Miss Laurence will serve as organist and chorister. We extend a cordial invitation to all to come. Every lover of the beautiful in mature as well as the beautiful in Gospel truth and Christian experience, may find it good to be there. We especially invite the ministers and people in the immediate vicinity to avail themselves of this feast of tisobrancies as helpful to a more agthe immediate vicinity to avail themselves of this feast of tabernacies as helpful to a more ag-gressive as well as a more enjoyable Christian with Pearline. The hard way wears out women and clothes the easy way saves wear and labor. Pearline harms nothing, in washing clothes or cleaning house. It does away with the Rub, Rub, Rub. Wash with soap, till you know better; you'll do no better till you get Pearline.

Other Use the imitations—cheap goods and peddled prideles—but don't wonder if your clothes are rained Way and some hands are. 220 LAMES PVLE, New York.

The Tabular Dash Lamp No. 23 of the S. G. & L. Co. is equally good as a Side Lamp or Hand Lamtern. Has a powerful reflector and either a plain or Bull's-Eye globe. Won't blow out in strongest wind, and can be filled, lighted, regulated, and extinguished without removing the globe. Throws light 200 feet straight ahead.

Buy it of your dealer. He has the content of the straight and the straight a

Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it for you if you inside. Send for our catalogue. STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY, Syracme, II.V. Chicago: m. Lake St.

School Bonds

have long been known to careful people, as among the safest investments. We sell them netting 5% to 6%. Write us for further Tene Lemila.

information. The Provident

Trust Co. 45 Milk St., Boston, Mass Please mention from's HERALD.

ONEY TO LOAN MACRIMA to could, from rewed, will be accepted as security. Den't hashtate to serie and ask for a Lean. Address, MUTUAL BAYINGS AND LOAN CO., Youth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, Po-

ow to EARN $100, and AGENTS WANTED

BAY VIEW HOUSE.

The Coast of Maine has become noted as the great resort in summer for those seeking pure air and come breezes to recoperate their exhausted energies. With its long stretches of hard, andly beach, its bold bluffs of rocks making into the esa, its inlets and coay nocks, woodlands and green fields, it is justly termed the "Garden of Eden," by all tourists and pleasure seekers.

and green fields, it is justly termed the "Garden of Eden," by all tourists and pleasure seekers.

In one of these pleasant, cosy nooks is located the BAY VISW HOUSE, which has been a popular resort for the last fitteen years.

It is located within three hundred fest of high water mark, making a unique feature by uniting the velvet green of the lawns with the white sands of the beach.

The BAY VISW is perfect in all its appointments, rooms singly or se suife, well ventilisted with fine views; rooms are all carpeted, well turnished, good springs on beds and hair mattresses; the corridors are wide and airy.

It has all the modern improvements, with abundant supply of pure spring water. Sanitary conditions perfect and well arranged.

Check all baggage to Old Orchard Beach.

The BAY VISW has been under the same management for ten years past, and will continue the same in the tuture.

The proprietors take this opportunity of assuring their old friends and patrons of their appreciation of many lavors in the past, and trust by giving their personal attention to the comfort of their guests, to continue to receive their patronage in the future, as well as to meet the approbation of all new patrons.

All letters and telegrams spring for information, rates and diagrams, prompsly and cheerfully answered.

Brecial prices will be made to parties who wish to make arrangements for a stay of six or eight weeks or longer.

Address,

E. MANSON & SON,
Proprietors and Owners,
Saco, Me.

NOVA SCOTIA, CAPE BRETON, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

These new tourist resorts are best reached by the steamers of the CANADA ATLANTIC a PLANT S. S. LINE. Avoid long and thresome railroad journeys and get an invigorating whilf

FOR CHARLOTTETOWN (calling at Hawkesbury both ways). S. S. FLORIDA leaves north side Lewis Wharf every Saturday at 10 A. M., connecting at Charlottetown with P. E. 1. Railway for all points on the Island.

FOR HALIFAX DIRECT.— 8. 8. OLIVETTE and HALIFAX losve north side Lewis Wharf every TUSSDAY, TRUBBDAY and SATURADAY, and Onnections with railroad and steamship lines for all points in the

For full information as to rates of passage or freight, summer tours, etc., apply to A. P. LANE, 268 Weshington St., or, RICHARDSON & BAR-NARD, Agents, 20 Atlantic Ave.

The Lamily.

"SPECIALLY ME." OFFICE

Persis E. Darrow.

Little Beth her prayer was saying Close beside her mother's knee; And this was the way she ended: "God bless us all — apecially me!"

And her words set me to thinking.

Was she selfish more than I?

Had not my own heart, half thoughtle

Made the same un-Christlike cry?

And my prayer that night was humbler, For I plainer seemed to see God's great mercy, and the weakness Of us all—"specially me."

OUTDOORS.

MONEY

Bine as the ephod robe
Of desert story
Deepens the sky and burns
With inner glory.
Blue, blue it burns and bears
Upon its bosom
Branch-work of rose and snow
And tufted blossom,
Tracery of core stem. And tufted blossom,
Tracery of coral stem,
Foam-wreath of flower,
Raining from airy heights
A silken shower.
And while full odors steal
With soft caressing,
Out of exhaustless wells
Forever pressing,
To gaze is transport and
To breathe is blessing!

To breathe is bleasing!

Sometimes I think the Lord
Of all this splendor
Looks at it with a love
Exceeding tender.
Because He loves it so
It seems to capture
Some efficience divine,
Some source of rapture,
Fosing with earth and air,
In wondrone seaven,
The beauty too intense
Of upper heaven!
Sometimes in vision half
The marvel seeing.
The vast, swift loveliness
Around me fleeing
Is but a gleam, a flash,
Of God's own being!

HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOPPORD, in Congregationalist.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful,

If all the sunshine was poured on us, we hould be blinded and burned. But we can see it on every little spear of grass, and in the water-sparkles, and on the hills, and the white clouds. That is the way we get it all. — Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

The bereavement which looks into the grave is leaden; the bereavement which dares to look toward the stars with hope is golden. — Rev. George H. Hepworth. .

They rested there, escaped awhile
From cares that wear the life away,
To eat the lotus of the Nile
And drink the popples of Cathay—
And in the sea waves drown the restless pack
Of duties, claims, and needs that barked upon their track.

Whittier. - Whittier.

There are few things more energetic than life. Put a seed into the fissure of a rock, and it will split it in twain from top to bottom. Though walls and rocks and ruins impede the course of the seedling, yet it will force its way to the light and air and rain. And when the Word of God enters the heart, it is not as a piece of furniture or lumber. It asserts itself and strives for mastery, and compels men to give up sin; to make up long-standing founds; to restore ill-gotten gains; to strive to enter into the strait gate. — Rev. F. B. Meyer.

I say it over and over, and yet again today;
It rests my heart as surely as it did yesterday;
"It is the Lord's appointment?"
Whatever my work may be,
I am sure, in my heart of hearts,
He has oftered it for me.

must say it over and over, and again today, for my work is somewhat different from yes-terday:

"It is the Lord's appointment!"

It quiets my restless will

Like voice of a tender mother,

And my heart and will are still.

I will say it over and over, this and every day, Whatsoever the Master orders, come what may:

"It is the Lord's appointment!"
For only His love can see
What is whest, best, and right,
What is truly good for me.

- Selected.

You have a work to do of some kind, and you do belong to the King. Perhaps you say, "I am only a 'Shut-in." Ah! so were all the flowers a little while ago. Every rose, every lily, was a "shut-in"—"shut-in" under ground without the light; but they grew. They pushed their way up; if they thought, they said to themselves, "I know it is dark, I know I haven't come to the flowering of my being, but I feel I am God's flower and I must not fall. I may come to see light some day;" and they did, and so will you. Keep pushing upwards, keep saying, "God is good. He did not make me for nothing. Here is a higher life, and I will keep on praying and trusting and doing the best I can. I know I am surrounded by dirt, but I will keep pushing it away and strive to get above it." And you will! "They dwelt with the king." We dwell with the king when we love Him, trust Him, are loyal to Him, care more for being like Him than for money or anything money can give us. This life is within your reach. This joyous, restful life — will you have it? Will you say of the work you have called yours, "It is His, and He will give me the strength to do His work, and some day I shall say as He said, 'I have finished the work Thou didst give me to do?'" Another may have to take it up where you lay it down, but your part of the work will be done, and you will be willing that other hands should do their part.— MARGARET BOTTOMS, in Silver Oress.

If we would die the death of the righteous we must live the life of the righteous. We go into another world as we go through this, and the office of religion is not simply to teach us how to enjoy the heavenly vision, but to teach us how to be obedient and true to the heavenly vision. Then indeed will the light be a light that does not fade. Sundays, Mondays, all the days it will sing and shine, becoming brighter and brighter through all the days on earth, till the vision of hope and faith merges and blends at last into the fuller vision of sight.—DAVID H. GREER, D. D., in "From Things to God."

FOR THE SPREAD OF THE KINGDOM.

Mary E. Bamford.

"LL give you that letter," said Mrs.

She was investigating a drawer.
"Why, where can I have put it?" she "Never mind," expostulated her visitor, Miss Katherine.

"Yes, I will mind!" persisted Mrs. Sha-

Katherine waited.

"There it is, at last!" announced Mrs. Shafer. "I thought! put it in here!" She handed the letter to Katherine.

"'Tisn't a very encouraging letter," vol-unteered Mrs. Shafer. "It's about that little Japanese girl the mission bands here have been supporting in Japan."

As Katherine walked down the road, after leaving Mrs. Shafer's, the girl read the letter

ncerning the Japanese scholar : —
"She is good in her Bible lessons and other studies, but is sly and deceitful. She is on our hearts now as a subject of special prayer, because, a few days ago, she wrote one of the teachers' signs on a paper, so that the man who buys for the children would get the things she ordered, thinking the paper had been endorsed by a teacher. The smallest children in school know this to be sinful, and yet she affirms that she did not know that it was wrong. As she is unusually bright, and in her thirteenth year, we do not believe her. We hope that, long before you hear this and can pray for her, she will have repented and told the truth."

Katherine sighed. She could well make allowance for grave faults in a heathen child, even after two years in school, and could hopefully look forward to her becom-ing a Christian. The letter had merely add-ed itself to the load of discouragement that Katherine bore. She was the ladies' foreign mission treasurer. Two-thirds of the mis-sion year had already gone, and only one-fifth of the amount of money pledged and necessary for the support of certain for-eign missionaries had come in. Katherine done all she could to increase the collections, but with small result.

"So few people seem to care !" sighed, sorrowfully.

Katherine had reached another road, and stood, hesitating, looking toward the pines. She knew that beyond this next half mile of pines was a long stretch of sand running out to the sea, and on the point was a lighthouse. The mother of the lighthouse keeper had recently sent word that she wished Katherine would call, some time when she could. The lighthouse keeper's mother, Mrs. Morris, was an old lady whom Katherine had once seen, but whom the care of her widower son's little child and the distance of the lighthouse from town generally prevented from coming to church.

"I wonder why she wants to see me?" Katherine questioned herself. pines was a long stretch of sand running out

She turned into the sandy road. olodded on, there was a faint sound of wind, high in the odorous pines. There were cries of bluejays quarreling overhead.

But Katherine heard nothing. She was utterly cast down. She could feel, too, that depressing letter in her coat pocket. How hard all work for foreign missions was!

At last she saw before her the end of the pines, and the great wooden gate that stretched across the road and opened upon the trail through the white sands. Kather-ine took hold of the board that held the gate shut. Suddenly she put her head down on

"O Lord !" she said, brokenly, "if o mission work is going to be a failure this year, and if we can't pay our missionaries, have tried !"

By and by she lifted her head, the gate swung shut behind her, and she plodded on, in sight of the sea, till she came to the light-

"I'm glad to see you," old Mrs. Morris greeted the girl. "I've been looking for you every day. I want you to open the mission-box. They tell me you're the treasurer."

"The mission-box?" questioned Kath-

Mrs. Morris guided the girl from the back Mrs. Morris guided the girl from the back of the light-house to the dark, front entry, and, opening the door a little so that Katherine could see a small box that was fastened to the wall. It old lady sat down on the stairs that led to the upper part of the building, and told her story.

"Since we came here," old Mrs. Morris said, "my son has had rheumatism so badly in kenes that I haven't wanted to make him climb the light-house stairs any often-him climb the light-house stairs any often-er than he has to, to see to the lamp. Tuesdays and Fridays the light-house is open to visitors. They drive down from those great hotels beyond town. Some days there will be as many as six carriages around here at once, and every new person wants to climb the stairs, and see the lamp, and go out on the iron balcony, maybe. Of course we never allow anybody to go up-stairs near the lamp without one of us go-ing, too, for we don't let visitors so much as touch the lamp with one of their fingers. "There are thirty-two steps between this floor and the lamp floor of the light-house, and when you climb thirty-two steps with one company of visitors, and then down again, and find some one else ready to go up, and you climb again and come down, and you do that off and on through the day, it's real hard work. My son couldn't do it, with the rheumatism in his knees, though he tried when it hurt him terribly.

"So I took it upon myself. Besides the climbing, there is the talking. I'd be so tired, saying over and over, 'This lamp's plunger is made of lead and weighs thirty-five pounds, and it's to force the oil into the lamp. And this disk magnifies the light six times. And this oil-tank holds five gallons. This light can be seen, on clear nights, from twenty to thirty miles at sea.'

"When visitors would come, after seeing the lamp, very often they would offer me some money to pay for my trouble. But, of course, being employed by the govern-ment, we couldn't take money for showing anything, and so I always said, 'No, thank

"One Sunday, I was away upstairs alone. I had my Bible, and I cried a little, thinking how I had always been used to being near church, and able to attend meetings, and help with church work som

"' I'm worthless, now,' I said, 'I'm old. I can't go to church, or do much of anything to spread His kingdom. I don't know as I'm good for anything but just to climb these stairs, and talk about this lamp.'
"I looked out at the water rolling, away, away, away, as far as I could see, and I thought of all the heathen off beyond that ocean. They hadn't any Gospel, and here I sat with my Bible in my lap, and I coul in't reach the Book to them across the waters, and their souls were dying! 'Oh, I wish I could help them!' I said.

"Of a sudden I thought of something. went downstairs, and found that box. Next day I fastened the box to the wall, and I said, 'I've been climbing these stairs be-cause I couldn't help it, but now I'm going to begin to climb them for the spread of the kingdom!'

"Bince then, when anybody that I've shown over the light-house says to me, any you for your 'Here's something to pay you for your trouble,' I answer, 'We're government folks, so we don't take pay, but there's my for-eign mission-box fastened on the wall, and if you drop anything into that I'll see that it goes to the spread of the kingdom.""

Mrs. Morris paused.
"I don't mind getting tired so much, every time I go up with the visitors, 'Pm climbing for the spread of the kingdom.'"

Katherine looked at the wrinkled old face and the gray hair, and her eyes grew a little

"Let's you and I open the mission-box now, and see how much is in it! " eagerly proposed Mrs. Morris.

The old lady laughed an excited little laugh. This was a moment to which she had looked forward for many a day. She was eager as a child while Katherine counted the money.

"Four dollars and sixty-five cents," anunced Katherine.

A tear rolled down Mrs. Morris' ch

"It's more than I ever was able to give to foreign missions in one year before, even when I lived near church!" she faltered. "I'm so glad! And I earned it myself, climbing! I can do something yet! I'm so glad! I'm going to try to fill that missionbox again."

After Katherine had plodded back over the white sands, she stopped where the large gate marked the beginning of the pines. She looked back. The light-house stood, round and tall, against the western sky. Within the light-house was the feeble old woman, who climbed " for the spread of

"Dear heart!" murmured the formerly discouraged treasurer. "How could I despair over the outlook for foreign missions when such earnest, prayerful souls are at

And the sight of the distant blue and high-tossed foam brought back to Katherine the words of a missionary labor-ing beyond those waters: "The world is to be Christ's, even if some years are hard. When the final conquering day dawns, we shall see how every moment led up to it, and shall be ashamed that we reckoned any hour hard, when its results are so blessed."

Fern Song.

Fern Song.

Dance to the beat of the rain, little Fern, And spread out your paims again, And say, "Tho' the Sun Hath my vesture spun, He had labored, alsa, in vain, But for the shade That the Cloud hath made, And the gift of the Dew and the Rain." Then laugh, and upturn All your fronds, little Fern, And rejoice in the beat of the Rain I JOHN B. TABB, in Youth's Companion.

The Place Where Duty Calls.

OU remember that pathetic poem of L our own Longfellow, entitled "The Chamber Over the Gate." Through every line of it sobs David's lament for Absalom. And the poem brings that distant sorrow into kinship with our own in lines like the

"There is no far or near,
There is neither there nor here,
There is neither soon nor late,
In that Chamber over the Gate; Nor any long ago To that cry of numan woe, O Absalom, my son!"

R trop

Caught in his difficult times, and whelmed in a grief passionate, withdrawn and alone, it was there in the chamber over the gate David wanted to sit and weep heart out, as he bewailed: "O my son Ab-and alone, it was there in the chamber over the gate David wanted to sit and weep his heart out, as he bewailed: "O my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!"... Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. He left the chamber over the gate, and sat in the gate. In the gate was the place of presence; it was the place of presence; it was the place of presence; it was the place of kingly and daily duty. And when the king sat in the gate, and all the people came before the king—that is, passed in splendid and jubilant review before him, appropriately celebrating the tough victory they had just won for him—then the people were sure that the king was still king; that he meant to do, amid and notwithstanding the hard, sad times which had seized him, his kingly duty; that he still had kingly solicitude for them and interest in them. And so their hearts grew brave, and the cooling embers of their loyalty began to flame anew.

Is not this snatch of the old story singularly suggestive concerning what we ought to do in difficult times. . . . I was looking at a specimen of that pest, the Russian thistle, the other day. It breaks off from its single stem in the autumn, and all along its edges it is crowded with seed-capsules, and when the winds haste and dash it along the prairies, every time it strikes the ground the seed-capsules burst and scatter their contents, and next season the wide prairie is hirsute with the thistle. And if you sit in the chamber over the gate idly and sadly bewailing your difficult times, instead of sitting in the gate where your duty calls you, you cannot help sowing the Russian thistles of disheartenment and discouragement all about you, especially among those over whom your personality is potent, and who trust you and look up to you. I was reading of a young officer during the war, whose battery had dwindled to a single gun, but who would keep his gun loaded and fired." And I am sure that lonely gun of his did ministry towar

HOR an "old lady," Aunt Serena has b traveling around quite extensively of late, out the middle of June, not anticipating the mee heat which visited New England at that intense heat which visited New England at that time, I arranged for a few days' outing in Ver-mont, to see a dear friend into whose face I had not looked for twelve years, when she was an enthusiastic little German student in Boston for two winters. She was one of the dearest girls in the world, and the Quaker-like brown gris in the wore so much always reminded me of a little brown sparrow; and to this day "Brown Sparrow" is my pet name for her, in spite of her big, broad-shouldered husband and two little girls. To visit her in her beautiful lovely little girls. To visit her in her beautiful country home had always been a deep wish; and when it seemed that I should never perhaps find a more propitious time than this summer, I just started, in spite of the torrid atmosphere. In or car as far as White River Junction I the partor car as tar as write styre Junction had the pleasure of the company of Rev. Jesse Wagner and wife. He was going up to Piermont to perform the marriage exempony for a young lady—the lest in a family of four, all of whom Mr. Wagner had married. At White River I witnessed a terrific thunder storm — the vivid chain-lightning, the hall, the floods of ram, the thunder rolling and echoing among the hills, making an impressive scene. But the storm-clouds broke and drifted away as we crossed Vermont in the heart of the Green Mountains, through some of the grandest scenthe world. Towering summits, seeming are the sky and covered with verdure to their tops, glimpses of lake and river, pretty villages and scattered farm-houses nestling at the base of the mountains, all made a won-drously lovely panorams. As the train winds along beside the beautiful Wincoski, rippling and sparkling over its pebbly bed, the lofty hills and sparking over its peobly bed, the lotty hills frowning in rugged grandeur close by, with oc-casional glimpses of Mt. Mansfield and Camel's Hump, an almost overwhelming sense of the power and majesty of God possesses the soul, and one realizes in a measure the Paalmist's maning when he cried: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." But sublime as is the mountain scenery it stiffes me. The great peaks looming up into the other oppress me. I feel dwarfed and shut in. I want horizon — the broad, illimitable horizon one gets beside the unresting sea, not the comparatively small expanse of upper sky al-lowed by the broken creats of mountain ranges. But the train sped on, and reached the Junction (where I expected my friend's husband to meet me) over an hour late. To my surprise and light, she was with him; and as the last train for their home had gone, we were obliged to go to Barlington for the night. Of all delightful places I ever visited, Burlington is one of the most charming. The city is built on high ground, the waters of Lake Champlain at its et, and a boundary of mountains all about the brison—the Green Mountains on one side, the dirondacks on the other. The University of Vermont is situated hers—an unsurpassed lo tion—and some of the private residences

Afters drive through the city the next morning. we took the train for Ferriaburgh, my friend's home—a delightful spot called "Little Otter Farm" (from the Little Otter River), where her warm" (from the Little Otter River), where her iwo fair-haired little girls, Faith and Harriets, were waiting with a warm welcome. Such counfort, such kindness, such home happiness visible everywhere, one seldom sees. Surely, for the "Brown Sparrow" the lines have lailen in pleasant places, notwithstanding the heat-ache and the loss that came to the home when the Reaper Death gathered the infant boy for the heavening garden. A visit to the homestead, a drive about Vergennes, the oldest city elead, a drive about Vergennes, the oldest city in the State, behind a pair of splendid horses, another long car ride across Vermont by a different route, but still amid picturesque scenery—and then home. Almost like a dream seems that fletting vision of mountain, lake and river, but the face of my trioud treats will like a long. out the face of my friend stands out like a clear e, and I know that my flying trip was a RIGHT in the midst of the blazing heat of the Isst week of June there came a pleasant surprise to Aunt Serena in the shape of a note from the genial hostess of the Bay View House lew days in that delightful spot. The tempta-tion was too great to be resisted, and on one of the hottest of Boston's hot days, I turned my face toward the Maine coast. Though the merits and ns of Bay View had often been extolled in saring by the editor and publisher of Zron's my hearing by the editor and publisher or any learing by the editor and publisher or any large of going there. From Old Orchard one is brought the train of open cars going there. From Old Orchard one is browned to flay View by a diminutive train of open cars (such like our street cars), drawn by a dummy making which coffs along and rings a most unus bell in a very energetic manner, stop-ing the route wherever a passenger wishes to alight or to get on. The track winds around the Hay close to the shore on one side, with pretty outtages sprinkled at intervals along the other. The Bay View is a large, attractive, well-sp-The Bay View is a large, attractive, well-up-pointed house, facing the wide expanse of Saco Bay, with ample grounds and surrounded by odorous pine trees. The soft, salty air and the bal-samic breath of the pines combine to form a most soothing atmosphere for the invalid or the tired soothing atmosphere for the invalid or the tired brain-worker. The summer suns, of course, beat down hotly on the white sands during the day, but the evenings and nights are deliciously coel, and the most inveterate victim of insomnia could hardly fall to find that here the precious boom of sleep would not be denied him. Large, airy rooms, wide plazzas with beautiful views of see and shore, perfect sanitary arrangements, a table that for variety and excellence could hardly be surpassed — what more could be desired for a summor's sojourn? The Bay View is a great favorite with Montreal people, whole families spanding the entire season here. It is the paradise of children of all ages, from infants of six months and less to those of inrger growth. Nurses and children or all ages, from intakts or eax months and less to those of larger growth. Nurses and children have a separate dining-room, and the hotel is remarkably quiet, considering that there are so many little ones in it. Croquet, swings, see bathing, etc., enliven the hours. A large Music Room is situated a stone's throw from the hotel, where, in the height of the season, there is much gavety.

much gayety.

Everybody, of course, loves Mrs. Manson, who, Everybody, of course, lowes Mrs. Manson, who, for many years, has so successfully carried on the business, with her son for a partner. But I suppose I ought not to use the old familiar name, Mrs. Manson no longer, but Mrs. Leavitt, having been married to Capt. Leavitt last year. So you see that managing a big hotel doesn't destroy all the romantic possibilities of one's nature, and Mrs. Leavitt certainly seems very happy in her new relation. One afternoon during my stay of three days Dr. One afternoon during my stay of three days Dr. and Mrs. William McDonald, with Mrs. Farley, their daughter, and Rev. Charles Munger, called their daughter, and Rev. Charles Munger, called at the hotel, and it was very pleasant to greet old friends in the McDonalds. Mr. Munger I had never met before, but I found him very win-ning and approachable. It is indeed gratifying to meet these old heroes of Maine Methodism, with whose names I have been so long familiar, but few of whom I have seen. Mr. Munger's gonial face and kind words will always be a crateful memory. And Dr. McDonald — whom genial face and kind words will siways be a grateful memory. And Dr. McDonaid — who a I have known and ioved these many years — is showing decided improvement in health since a month ago. He and his wife and daughter are staying at Old Orchard, where he hopes to derive much benefit from the health-giving breezes that sweep in from the ocean. But to go back to Mrs. Manson (Mrs. Leavitt, I mean). If negres that last winter, after her

I mean). It seems that last winter, after her marriage, she visited the McDonalds, but never mentioned her new ties, they of course being ignorant of the fact. So the other day when th norant of the fact. So the other day when they called there was quite an amusing conversation when the subject came up, and the only plea Mrs. Leavitt could offer for her silence was that "when two old folks got married, she thought they ought to keep as still as possible about it." But amid the laughter and chaff which followed, Aunt Serema quietly made up her mind that the Methodist public should be informed that the efficient proprietor of Bay View had given her hand and heart away in a happy second marriage.

eart away in a happy second marriage.
But too few were the days I was able to spend in that charming spot on Ferry Boach. Then back to brick walls, the intense heat of city streets, and a desk piled up with work. Still, one is always glad to come back to dear old

About Men.

-Henrik Ibsen, the Norwegian author, oves to keep his hair in disorder. This is said o be his one vanity. He always carries a little conet case, says a Danish writer, containing a looking-glass and a comb, attached to the lin-ing of his gray hat. He often removes his hat to look into the mirror to see how his hair is ly-ing. If it is not rough enough to suit his fancy, he uses the comb to give it the requisite tangle. — Journal of Education. toilet case, says a Danish writer, containing a

-It is related that the late Dr. Phillips Brooks, on seeing a caricature of himself with strictures on his appointment as Bishop, im-mediately penned the following lines:—

ly penned the following lines:—
And is this then the way he looks,
This tiresome creature, Phillips Brook
No wonder, if yis thus he looks,
The church has doubte of Phillips Broo
Well, if he knows himself, he'll try
To give these doubtful looks the lie.
He dares not promise, but will seek lives as a lishon to be meek;

Oliver Wendell Holmes said recently of Hawthorne's well-known diffidence, "It was always an adventure whether one would succeed in enticing Hawthorne into anything like com in enticing Hawthorne into anything like com-municative intercourse. He went his solitary way through life like a whale through the crowds of lesser fishes in the sea. You might stand in your boat and hurl your harpoon at him as he passed—it was hit or miss. If you succeeded in bringing him to, he was get enough company for a while in his abstracted, Olympian way. If you missed him, you would hardly have another chance for a year."

hardly have another chance for a year."

— A bronse tablet to the memory of E. P., Roe, the novelist, was recently unveiled at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. The tablet was procured by public subscription, and is placed in a natural wall of rock in the E. P. Roe Memorial Park. The Roe family was represented by two of the novelist's sons, Eitings and Murray Ros. The orator of the day was Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Brocklyn. The other speakers were Hamilton Gibson, Rev. Dr. Teal, of Elizabeth, N. J., and Mr. Frank Dodd, of Dodd, Mead & Oo.

A FORSAKEN IDOL

Jacob buried his gods at Shechem—Cast-off idols of stone and wood.
Well he wot they would ne'er bespeat Further evil nor future good;
Nevertheless he could not trent them Just like pieces of wood and stone, when he thought how he'd tried to a Up aloft on an altar-throne.

Once an idol I fondly cherished,
Which was known by the name you bear;
But my faith in its virtues perished
When I found it was faise as fair;
Nevertheless I could not break it
Like an image of worthless clay,
When I thought how I'd tried to make it
All I ever could hope or pray.

In my heart, down a shady hollow,
Where the willow of weeping waves,
Hide false gods I was wont to follow,
Out of sight in forgotten graves.
There you lie with no name above youWith no epitaph false or true,
Save the fact that I used to love you
Ere at Shechem I burled you.

ELLEN THORNEYCHOPT FOWLER, in Pall

Little folks.

RAY'S OUTING.

Mrs. Emma A. Lente

Archiel You might fall and lame ourself for life, and you might almost as

Mrs. Dean, who was speaking from the window to her son, had not noticed the hoy with a crutch who was among the admiring audience watching Archie's nimble per formances, or she would not have said just

"Oh, no, mamma, I won't fall," said the jumper; but, being trained to obedience, he went down a step or two and sprang to the sidewalk.

"Hah! anybody could jump that much 'niess he was a cripple!" said a boy disdainfully, and one by one the children moved away until only the boy with a crutch was left as spectator.
"I wish I could ever do like that," he nid.

"Can't you ever?" asked Archie, sitting down on the lowest step. "Won't your leg

"They say not. I've been lame ever since I was a young one. I'm most nine

"So am I. What made it that way at "Fell down stairs. I jest near about died.

"My! that's awful!" Archie had a sudden respect for his mother's wisdom. What if he had fallen, and had to suffer un-told pain and lost the use of his lithe, sturdy

"And you've never rolled hoople? or played wolf or hopscotch, or jumped over tie-posts ? "

"Course not. I'll be glad when I git growed up so I won't want to do what I see other boys do."

"What do you do with yourself, any-

For the first time Archie noticed how poorly dressed the lame boy was. Lame oor! "I set an' whittle, an' cut paper, an' read if I have anything, an' then walk around till I'm fagged out; an' then I go home an' set an' wait for ma to come. She works out most every day. My pa was a brake-man, an' he got killed a long while ago; an' then my sister Ellen died; she was older'n me, an' I sin't no good. If I wasn't lame I could sell papers or somethin' to help ma along; she's got a pain in her side a lot

"Me? Why, I go to school, an' play, an' read story-books,an' go to the park; as a little while I'm going in the country to tay two months. My grandpa's got the st farm you ever see. I don't s'pose you've ever rode on a hay-riggin' or jumped lately. What do you do all the time ?"

n a mow, neither?".
"No. What's a hay-riggin' an' a mow?" "Gracious! don't you know? Why, one's a wagon they put hay on, an' the other's the hay when it's put in the barn.

You go up on one pile that's high, an' jump 'way down in some more that's soft and smells so good. Ain't you got no place to go in the country ?"

"No, I ain't never been; but me did when she was young, where there was lots of grass to walk on, an' apples on trees— she seen 'em a-growin'; but we're too poor to ever go now, she says. But we're goin up to the park mebbe; we went once las-summer an' staid a hull day! "

"Only once in a summer — an' I go about every week! I don't care much about it no more."

Archie began to realize how many bless ings and privileges he had, from this talk with one who had so few, and he said ear-

"I do wish you could go to the real country!" And then he went on with such a vivid description of his grandpa's farm and the many delights to be found there, that his listener fairly held his breath in wonder.

"I must go home I'm gittin' so tired," he said, finally. "I'm giad there is such nice places to hear about if I can't never see 'em."

Hold on a minit. Where do you live? An' if you'll come along here some other day I'll tell you a lot more. I ain't told "Mebby I'll come by tomorrow, an' I live 730 Eighth Avenue, top floor, back. Ma says we used to live nicer, but it's the best we can do now."

Archie ran in to tell his mother about his new acquaintance. He always made a confidant of her, sure of ready interest and sympathy.

"I do wish he could go to grandpa's. I tried to make him see how things were there, but I just couldn't do it by talkin'. I don't s'pose grandpa would have another boy around; he says I'm a big nuisance sometimes, an' then he laughs. S'pose you just write an' ask him nice, mamma?

"No, dear, this is your affair. But you may write if you like, after I see the boy and his mother. I will get her for a day's work if I can, and judge for myself. I should not want you to have a rough associate for sev-

"Oh, he's nice actin, only his cost was too little an' patched. An' I can write about him soon?"

And this was the missive which Grandna Norris laughed over and almost oried over a few days later. It was Archie's own pro-

DRAR GRANDPA: Your the nicest one I ever see. There is a boy heer ain't nevur ben in no countrey. I wish he cool. He is lame an his fathur is ded, he ain't gott no granpa te go to see I had most rather he'd oum than me this summur if you ain't gott room for onley one. Yoor place is big, he is as little as me. Ma is cumming next weak, if you rite we will kno hoo can cum Your owne nise granboy,

When the answer to this letter was re ceived, it was hard to tell which of the boys the concerned was the happier; and when the beautiful journey by beat and rail was completed, and Grandpa Norris greeted them at the station, he looked as happy as anybody possibly could. As the sleek horses trotted over the road home, and the lame boy looked this way and that over broad stretches of grass and grain and corn and orchard and forest, and at the wealth of berries and flowers even along the road-side, he realised that the half had not been told him; and when the spacious farmi was reached, and grandma had hugged and kissed both boys alike, and the wonderful supper had been eaten, and the garden and barn explored, there was but one regret to mar the perfect bliss, and that was that his mother was not there to see and enjoy it all with him.

As days passed Ray found that he could share many of Archie's country sports. His lame leg seemed to grow stronger as his thin frame filled out with the generous country food and pure air. He was even hoisted to the top of loads of hay by the strong arms of the farm hands, and though he could not jump from diszy heights into the fragrant mass, there was no one so successful as he in finding the hidden nests where lay the great pearly eggs. And how many of them he could eat in a day—even more than Archie.

But the weeks fairly flew, and when September came, Ray's mother hardly knew him on his return.

All this happened last year, and this year both Ray and his hard-working mother invited to the Norris farm for a few

If only all weary toilers and wan-faced children in city tenements, top floor, back, had such a plossant and healthful outing in prospect!

Editorial.

bib am GOOD COUNSEL.

JOHN WESLEY says, in one of his ser-mons: "Near fifty years ago, a great and good man, Dr. Potter, then Archbishop of Canterbury, gave me an advice for which I have ever since had reason to bless God: If you desire to be extensively useful, do not spend your time and strength in con-tending for or against such things as are of a disputable nature; but in testifying against open, notorious vice, and in pro-moting real, essential holiness."

This counsel is no doubt sound; but in the practical application of it difficulties may practical application of it difficulties may easily arise. What things are " of a disputable nature?" Men will greatly differ on this point, and stoutly dispute. This much, however, is clear—that which one acknowledges to be disputable it would be very foolish to press with strenuous zeal and dogmatic earnestness. Matters plainly not vital he may well leave to be excepted over by those who have no better. wrangled over by those who have no better business, while he devotes himself to press-ing "essential holiness"—in other words,

SINCERITY IN SPEECH.

THE telling of little "white lies" is a fault which is growing to sad proportions in these days of complex social obligation and the all-consuming desire to appear other and better than we really are. People who would shrink from telling an out-and-out falsehood do not hesitate to convey a false impression which is equally misle ing and amounts, in the end, to precisely the same as a bare-faced lie. How many times in a day does the tongue of the weakminded, conforming man or woman stam-mer, "Yes, yes!" to that to which they ious their interlocutor expec assent 1 "You know that poem of Clough's which begins so-and-so?" And the obliging listener, too weak to confess that he has never read a word of Clough, answers, nervously, "Yes," and the little white lie why not black?) is told. Too late to call it back now. So the insincere man lets it go and covers it up with others.

It is a growing and dangerous habit, this of insincerity in speech. It gradually under-mines the moral character; it leads to deliberate falsehood, to willful deception, to the commission of small breaches of trust which may be concealed by falsehood; and finally, if unchecked, it leads to the commission of graver crimes, the natural result of weakened moral fibre.

The true Christian must be absolutely sincere in word as well as in deed and intent. the safe, even for politeness' sake, to daily with these little white lies. Tell the truth, even though it makes you appear ungenerous, unsympathetic, or less wellinformed than your friend took for granted. You owe it to yourself, and you owe it to others, to be as frank and sincere as your words imply that you are. Do not say "yes" when you mean "no." Be honest in speech, if you hope to remain honest in

THE PERFECT DOING OF COMMON THINGS.

To do common and apparently unim-L portant things in a slipshod and care-less way is a fault which, in this age of haste and scramble, seems to be grow-ing more and more prevalent. To fix atten-tion and effort on great enterprises, and let smaller things take care of themselves, is the unfortunate habit of many a man who is striving to win success in life.

This tendency seems to have crept even into the religious life of the age. How many of us are given to neglect the little things, the common things, which once formed so real and vital a part of a sincere Christian life! Take, for insta such every-day religious matters as family prayer, and private devotion, and the saying of grace at meals. We doubt if one family in ten, even among church members, adheres faithfully and unifor these common religious duties. Even if they are performed, it is, in too many and formal cases, a perfunctory, hasty observance. And the same criticism would extend to many other common, yet vital, duties which lected altogether, or discharged in the most slipshod way.

The question arises whether these very common duties of the religious life are not those which test and prove the quality of Christianity. Bonaventura says: best perfection of a religious man is to do common things in a perfect man-ner." And we know that Christ's estimate of the ability to rule over many things is of the solitity to rule over many things is based upon one's capacity to be faithful in that which is least. There must be some-thing wrong in the Christianity of the man who neglects or lightly esteems the com-mon things of the religious life. His spirit is not that of the Master, surely, whose whole teaching seems to be a reltera-tion of the importance of little thingswho emphasized the cup of water, the service of the Samaritan, the widow's mite, more than the building of temples or the conduct of vast religious enterprises.

LIBERTY - BUT LAW.

FOR the working-man in his struggle to secure rights and privileges, we have only words of sympathy and encourage-ment so long as he contends lawfully and employs the weapons allowable in mo civilization; but the moment he resorts to violence and endeavors to reach his ends by mob rule and the destruction of proper-ty, he has gone back to the methods of ruder ages or descended to the plane of brute force where he must be met by counter force. America means opportuni-ty, the utmost freedom of the individual; but back of that it means law and order. The method of the robber cannot be sancnor allowed. The United States cannot reason with a mob. For such com-binations it has only the hard hand, and, if need be, the harder weapon. Civil order is the first law of the Republic, and, until that be secured, there is no room for parley or reasoning on the question of human rights. It is the first right of society to maintain order, and on that right the people of the United States will insist. masses of the nation are not anarchists nor socialists, and they will not tolerate the methods of anarchists anywhere in this great land. The wrongs of men are not righted in that way.

The working-men in Chloago had a right to leave the shops if they chose — to leave in a body if they thought that best; they had no right to engage in a campaign of violence or to incite others to do so. slow to believe that many working-men were in the mob, but it is inevitable that they should bear the blame of it because the strike afforded the opportunity for the uprising. The late disturbances must go far to convince men that the rights of labor are not to be secured by violence, but by legislation. Let the working-men maintain their organizations; but instead of resorting to threats and strikes, let them en-deavor to obtain national and state legislation which will secure them, so far as law can secure them, in all their rights. Ours is the age of reform, and hardly any per-sistent appeal of large bodies of men for fairness fails of a response by law-making bodies. The laborer may not secure all his rights in a day; he will obtain them much coner than by violence or even by strikes. The strike is an expensive and hard method for the laborer as well as for the employer. One-half the effort put forth in a wise way to secure legislation favorable to the la-borer would have insured better results. Let the appeal be, not to the strong arm, but to justice and fairness - sure in the end to prove more potent than the mere money power. Not a little has been done already power. Not a little has been done already in this direction in several of the States which has proved extremely helpful to th laborer; he has only to continue in the same direction, and the work will soon be done so thoroughly that strikes will be entirely a matter of the past.

In the late uprising we probably reached a crisis in the labor struggle. There is a new set in the tide of feeling, both in the ranks of labor and in the general public. Large as was the movement among labor organizations, it is plain that there was great reluctance with many to act, and the order calling out the Knights of Labor fell very nearly flat, hardly 14,000 out of the 200,000 responding to the call. The laborers have become weary of this expensive and severe mode of warfare, many thin We shall be surprised if they do not from this time begin to turn to a better method of warfare, in which they will have the apathles of the nation at large

The feeling of the people is evidently more fully than ever before set against these disturbances in the labor world. It deranges all the lines of business; it is an irreparable damage to the material and moral interests of society. The late troub-les cannot fall to lead to legislation which will go far to prevent the recurrence of cenes as have been witnessed in Chi-There should never be another. That there may not be, the laws must pro-vide a mode of settling labor disputes. Compulsory arbitration is the panaces.

GOOD INTENTIONS NOT ENOUGH.

WE sometimes hear it said by those who neither think clearly nor speak correctly, and yet assume to be teachers of supreme authority in matters of high Christian living, that all God requires of us is we a pure intention. carefully examined, meaning well is seen to be a very different thing from doing the right; and certainly the latter has a claim Good intentions may be enough to predemnation, and this perhaps is all that the aforesaid teachers really mean by their loose assertions; but the distinction here should certainly be drawn with some precision. Good intentions may excuse the doer, but they do not justify the deed if it be one that is contrary to general well-being. With the very best will in the world a person may work great harm. He may shed much innocent blood and perpetrate all manner of atrocities, with the idea that he is doing a service to God and benefiting humanity. A person's actions may be out of harmony with the universe, may be fly-ing in the face of the nature of things, that is, the nature and will of God, while at the same time he purposes to do right. There is a higher standard of moral judgment than his purpose. It is far from sufficient simply to do the best one knows. One may terribly blunder through ignorance. To be true to convictions of duty is one thing; to do the things that are best and that harmonize with reality is quite another thing. Right intentions will not alone fulfill all righteous-ness. The attitude of our will toward our ideal may be all right while that ideal is wrong, or at least very far astray; in which case the result will be very deplorable and perhaps mischievous. Judged by the supreme test of consequences in the long run, certain actions are evil; they do not produce true prosperity or minister to genuine happiness. Yet he who under certain cir-cumstances does these actions may have such high, pure motives that he is free from ability to perceive anything but the coarsest, plainest moral distinctions, is quite compatible with a high degree of faithful-ness to what is esteemed to be right. This thought is of great value in the equalization of probationary conditions and in prevent-ing wrong apportionments of guilt; but it will do harm if it is permitted to obscure

Low mental development and in-the distinction between things that are really right or wrong as measured by the immutable law of God.

It is a very common thing to confuse the question of personal merit or demerit with this other question of what is ideally right and good. In the former, full allowance is for individual standpoints, for multiplied deficiences arising from heredity and environment, for imperfect development and manifold ignorances, for physical disease and weaknesses both of body and mind; all these things come in to deter-mine the degree of blame or guilt that pertains to him who has failed to take right course or has actually taken the wrong The guilt may be greatly diminished, or indeed entirely precluded, by some plea of this sort, while the consequences of the action were in the highest degree disastrous. A baby might start a conflagration that would destroy a whole city. A war whose horrors no pen could portray might result from an entire misconception of duty on the part of some fanatical, bigoted

To make a deed really ideal, and so in the largest, deepest sense right, it must be not only well-meant, but actually in harmony with the true welfare of mankind, and in deed with the highest interests of the universe. It must be in tune with the music of the spheres. It must accord with facts as

That this discussion has a close and pertinent bearing on the great doctrine of tian perfe intelligent reader. We have not space just now to make the application; but it will be clear to all who think, that there must be at least two kinds of perfection, according as a perfect intention or a perfect action is reerred to, and that there is a very wide difference between these two. Much simless and profitless disputing, a darkening of counsel by words without knowledge, would be prevented if this distinction could be

Death of Rev. Dr. Rogers.

T is with the utmost sadness that we announce, as we go to press, the sudden death of Rev. Charles S. Rogers, D. D., a conspicuous and highly-honored member of the New Bugland Conference, a beloved pestor in many of our leading churches, and, since the last Conference, the popular presiding elder of Boston South District. He had been ill for some months. The attack of grippe, from which he suffered last winter, had left his physical system in a damaged condition. At the date of the Conference he had so far recovered as to be shie to recover the set by the concentration. damaged condition. At the date of the Conference he had so far recovered as to be able to resume his duties as a pastor; and on receiving his appointment to the district, he began his new work with confidence and courage. But his courage exceeded his strength. For many weeks he had suffered from a relapse, being unable to attend to the duties of his position. From this second attack, however, he seemed in a fair way of recovery, and was able again to be out. But to his friends it was apparent that the est of the trouble had not been er ills were invading the system. On Sunday he was unusually cheerful, and received calls from his friends, but on Monday morning, while sitting in his chair, he suddenly expired at 7.30. The original trouble had devel-Bright's disease and heart derangen which he no doubt died.

Dr. Rogers was born sixty-one years ago at Huntington, L. I. He belonged to a large fam-ily, members of which still remain about the old comestead. The means of early instruction were improved so that he entered Wesleyan University and graduated honorably in 1859. The same year he joined the New England Confer-ence, receiving his first station (1859-'80) at The next three years he church at Quincy Point, passing thence ('64-'66) to Dorchester. He was stationed at Newton, 1867-'69; Beverly, '70-'71; Dorchester (a second term), "72-"74; Lynn, Boston St., "75-"77; presiding elder of North Boston District, "78-"81; der of North Boston District, '78.'81; ter, Trinity, '82-'84; Springfield, State St., '85-'87; Cambridge, Harvard St., '88-'91; Boston, Baker Memorial, '92; presiding elder of Boston South District, '94.

Dr. Rogers was one of the most useful men in the Conference. In all the churches which he in the Conference. In all the charter before the was greatly beloved by the people. He was a peace-maker. He knew men in their weaknesses and strength; he knew how to deal weaknesses and strength; he knew how to deal with them, so as to draw them to himself and toward each other. However crooked the element of which his church happened to be made up, he was sure to carry it through his term without a jar. No man was ever ugly enough to be able to quarrel with him; if any one ever approached him as an enemy, he was sure to leave as a friend. He served the Dorchester church wice, and would have been welcomed, back to twice, and would have been welcomed back to any of his old charges. The friends he made were friends for life. As a pastor he was invariably profitable to the churches he se ts of his work continued after his departure, and his name remained in the charges as ointment poured forth. There was a benediction in every memory of him. He knew all his people, and remained constantly in touch with even the est member of his flock. The children were taken to his heart and molded under his hand. By his constant and considerate attentions he made every person in his congregation feel at home. He knew everybody, even the latest comer, and was sure to greet them when-ever met on the street. He possessed what so many people want — a large and sympathetic heart and an open hand.

r he was good rather than A thorough scholar and student, he brought A thorough scholar and student, he brought "besten oil" to the sanctuary; and what he had furnished for the satisfaction of the people was given out in a delightful conversational style, which never fails to please. His utterances in the pulpit were made with the utmost propriety and good taste. There was nothing sensational about him. He could never be rude or inapt. At every point he knew the proper thing to say, and said it in a way to please the most fastidious taste. Beyond all this his speech was from the heart and out of generous sympawas from the heart and out of generous sympsthies, and was carried with persuasiveness to the hearts of the hearers. He was patterned after St. John, the beloved disciple, rather than St. Paul, the dislectician and theologian.

As a member of the Conference he was held in high esteem as a good, wise and true man. He began small and rose gradually from the first hour till he came to the very front. He possessed excellent qualifications for the high office of presiding elder. He was discreet, cantious, far-seeing, with an accurate knowledge of men and affairs, which made him a safe adviser and manager, especially in the work of stationing. w no trumpets, nor did he reveal all his to be ready for any emergency, having thought the matter all out beforehand. The death of such a man is a great loss to the Conference and to the district over which he was called to pre-

G EORGE R. GRAHAM, who had a remark able career as a business man, a journalist, and founder of Graham's Magazins, was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 18, 1813, and died at the Memorial Hospital, Orange, N. J., July 18.

1894. His father, who had been a wealthy shipping merchant, died more than the safety of the same of t ping merchant, died poor when the son was fit-teen. After a good preparatory education George was placed in the law office of Jared Inoll, but was obliged to leave and eng work on a farm. In 1832 he began in his native city the cabinet-maker's trade, at which he worked twelve hours a day and devoted six to study. He soon joined his friend, Charles J Peterson, in the purchase of a weekly publication called the Casket, which continued until 1840. Graham and Peterson then purchased the Gentleman's Magasine of William B. Burton. It had 4,500 subscribers, and its most brilliant contributor was Edgar Alian Poe. A year later Graham acquired the sole ownership, and brought out the first number of 1831 as Graham's Magasine, which soon became the foremost monthly out the first number of 1831 as Graham's Magasine, which soon became the foremost monthly in the land. He retained Poe as a contributor, and soon added to his list the names of William Cullen Bryant, Bayard Taylor, James Fenimore Cooper, N. P. Willis, H. W. Longfellow, J. R. Lowell, J. G. Saxe, E. P. Whipple, Ann S. Stophens, Thomas Dunn English, and other writers. The magazine obtained a wide circulation, and Mr. Graham enjoyed for several years an annual income of $50,000. He became personally acquainted with the leading men of the country, and counted among his friends Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun and Daniel Webster.

In his views he was intensely pro-slavery, and made, in his magazine, a bitter attack on Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which wrought his ruin. The magazine at once began to dwindle in its circulation. But while in the full tide of prosperity he purchased the Datiy North dwindle in its circulation. But while in the full ide of prosperity he purchased the Daily North American, and the United States Gasette, which were consolidated under the name of the North American. He invested in other journals and became an extensive land and mine owner; but in 1870 he came out poor. As assistanted itor of the Newark Daily Journal he earned a scanty subsistance, until, in 1880, he gave up work on account of falling sight. George W. Childs and Anthony J. Drexel, who had known him in the days of prosperity, sent him in 1887 to the Hospital where he died. On the death of Mr. Childs his widow declined longer to continue the contribution to Mr. Graham, when Frank W. Baldwin, editor of the Orange Chronicle, who had become interested in the fallen Frank W. Baldwin, editor of the Orange Chronicle, who had become interested in the fallon journalist, secured pledges from some of the leading publishers and journalists to support him to the end. Since January last his mind had become clouded and his memory greatly impaired. During these months the movements of the heart became fitful and irregular, its continued action being secured only by strong doses of nitro-glycerine. Thus ended a life which, though marked by great vicinsitudes, contributed largely to the upbuilding of our periodical uted largely to the upbuilding of our periodical literature. Graham's Magasine was the Har-per's of fifty years ago.

Personals.

- Prof. Clinton Scollard, of Hamilton College has gone to Europe with Mrs. Scollard.
- Miss Ida A. Ahlborn resigns the chair of English literature and history in Baker Univer-

n in ple, the

the

- Rev. Dr. W. R. Goodwin and wife, of Simpson Church, Chicago, recently celebrated their silver wedding anniversary.

   Miss M. A. Gouchenour, of our Central China Mission, has married Dr. W. F. Seymour, of our North China Mission.
- —Rev. Samuel Plants, Ph. D., president-elect of Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., has re-ceived the degree of D. D. from Albion College.
- Rev. John J. Tigert, D. D., book editor of the M. E. Church, South, has received from the University of Missouri the honorary degree of
- -Bishop Andrews' official visit to and address before the Irish Wesleyan Conference received favorable comment from the English
- —Bishop Ninde writes to the Christian Advocate that he reached Yokohama, June 4, in good health, and would spend a few days with Rev. J. Soper in Hakodate.
- Miss L. G. Hale, of our mission at Trun Hus, North Chins, who has been absent at her post since 1888, has returned for a vacation to ber home in West Newbury, Mass.
- Rev. Jackson Milligan, a Baptist minister of Crittenden County, Ky., has been convicted of heresy because he taught the doctrine of sanctification. His license has been revoked.
- Rev. M. Ishiraka, who soon returns to Japan to preach under the authority of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has received the hard-earned degree of Ph. D. from Johns Hopkins Univer-
- Rev. John Reid Shannon, of Grace Church Denver, Col., has declined the honorary degree of D. D. conferred on him by the America Temperance University at its r
- Prof. John R. Todd, of Wilmington Conference Academy, having recently returned from Oxford, England, where he has spent a year with ing his friendships in New England.
- Rev. George A. Phinney writes: "For the last two years I have tried to have my post-office address, which I inserted as Dorchester in my report to Conference, published as Dorchester Instead of Mattapan. Some one has made the change this year thereby delaying my corrections. instead of Mattapan. Home one has made such change this year, thereby delaying my corre-spondence directed according to our Minutes a whole mail. Today a card inviting me to the funeral services at Mt. Auburn of the widow of my beloved teacher, Dean Latimer, did not reach me until the time of the service for the above reach. Tabould have been present at Mt. Auburn as president of the class of 1863 and as a personal friend. Please ask the brothren to re-member that my address is Dorchester."

- Mr. J. D. Slayback, the well-known New York layman, has completed twenty-five years of faithful service as superintendent of Wash-ington Square Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school, New York city.
- —Mr. E. C. Walden, son of Binhop Walden, who during the past year made a fine record as professor of science in Rust University, is now pursuing a post-graduate course in blology at the Summer School at Wood's Holl.
- The Baroness Langenau, of Vienna, who has been much persecuted because she is a Methodist, recently spoke at a meeting of the West London Mission and presented it with a necklace worth $10,000, to be sold for the benefit
- In the proceedings of the American Institute of Instruction, held last week at Bethlehem, N. H., we notice that Rev. P. D. Blakeslee, D. D., principal of East Greenwich Academy, R. I., gave "an exceedingly able and interesting paper" on "Character Building in Academies."
- Rev. Geo. J. Newton, formerly from Coventry, Vt., and later a supply in the Vermont Conterence, has been spending the last year in study in Boston University, and is now suffering from a serious inflammation of the eyes, being nearly blind in consequence. Much sympathy will be felt for him.
- Rev. G. F. Arms and wife, after six years of — Rev. G. F. Arms and wife, after six years of successful missionary work in Chile, during which time Mr. Arms has been at the head of Bishop Taylor's schools at Concepcion, and also pastor of the American Church, have returned to the States for a rest. Their post-office address will be Richford, Vt., and they will doubtless be available for camp-meetings and other assemblies where stirring missionary addresses are needed.
- -A correspondent, writing to us of Mother Wait (widow of the late Rev. Daniel Wait, of Wait (widow of the late Rev. Daniel Wait, of the New England Conference), who died at he home in Peabody, June 14, says: "She was a woman of deep piety, of a sweet and lovable nature, and of abounding self-sscriftce. All the churches Mr. Wait served loved her dearly, and in the town where she spent her last days she was highly esteemed."
- Rev. Henry Matthews died at the parsonage, North Andover, July 13, at 5 A. M... of cancer of the liver, aged 57 years. Mr. Matthews had not been in firm health for some time. He was quite ill on Monday last, slightly better on Tuesday and Wednesday, but became worse on Wednesday night, and from then to his decease he suffered intensely. He leaves an invalid widow and one daughter, who need the prayers of the church. The funeral occurred on Monday last at 1.30.
- Rev. W. Moriey, the new president of the eneral Conference of the Australasian Methodist Church, went to New Zealand in 1863, having ist Church, went to New Jones.

  been previously accepted for the ministry by the English Conference. In 1879 he was elected president of the New Zealand Conference, and president of the New Zealand Conference, and was called to the chair of that Conference a second time in 1884. In 1888 Mr. Morley very effectively represented Australasian Methodism at the English Conference. In 1891 he was a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference at Wash-
- The text of Dr. R. F. Horton's first sermon prescribed at the age of 18) was from Ecclesiastes: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter." "How like early youth!" muses the pastor of Lyndhurst-road Church, dropping for pastor of Lyndaurst-road Church, dropping for the moment into the cotogenarian mood. "At eighteen we hurry to the end and sum up things in the most approved dogmas. At thirty-eight we find ourselves at the beginning, tollsomely and yet eagerly content with certain apparently small results of thought, and life, and prayer."
- Mr. F. W. Whitney, of Leominster, p - Mr. F. W. Whitney, of Leominster, passed to the heavenly home, July 9, aged 69 years. For over forty years he has been a pillar of strength to our church in that town, carrying its interests upon his heart and contributing most liberally both thought and money for its success. His bereaved family bave the prayer tul aympathy of all in their great sorrow. The funeral services were held on Thursday, conducted by his pastor, Rev. C. H. Talmage, assisted by Revs. John Peterson, J. H. Mansfield, D. D., W. B. Toulmin, and C. W. Wilder, former pastors.
- Says the Central: "St. Louis Methodism — Says the Central: "St. Louis Methodism was bereaved last week of one of its ornaments and factors in the decease of Mr. John Edgar Reynolds, who died on Sunday, July 1, at the age of 60. He was born of good Methodist stock in Pennsylvania, came West some time in the fittles, and after spending a few years in Keokuk, removed to St. Louis in 1866, where he Keokuk, removed to St. Louis in 1850, where me has remained ever since. He was at first in the employ of the Ohlo & Mississippi railroad com-pany, but for the past tweuty-five years he has served the Vandalis system (as contracting the target) with assiduous devotion and insing skill."
- The Christian Advocate says: "Profe logical Seminary, will sail on the "Trave," July 31. He goes to Oxford to visit Professor Sayce and attend the meetings of the Anthropological ction of the British Association. He is also Section of the British Association. He is also the delegate of the American Philosophical So-ciety to the tenth International Congress of Orientalists at Geneva, where he is to read a paper on 'A New Manuscript of the Pirke Aboth.' At the ninth congress, held in London in 1892, Professor Rogers was honorary secretary of the Amyrio-Babylonian Section, and was then chosen member of the next congress, which is now to be held in Geneva, Sept. 3-12."

- President J. W. Bashford, of Ohio Wesley-an University, who is visiting this city and is heartly welcomed by his many friends, looked in upon as last week.
- We very much regret, on account of ab-sence, the privilege of meeting our long-time and highly-valued friend, Samuel Huntington, of Burlington, Vt., who called at the office last
- —James Hurd, aged 70 years, while passing from one car to another on a train from Boston, July 14, just before its arrival at the station in Lowell, fell to the ground, fracturing his skull. He died in a few minutes. He resided at 15 Bellevue Street, Lowell, and was manager of a summer hotel at Pigeon Cove, Rockport, Mass.
- a summer hotel at Pigeon Cove, Rockport, Masse.

   The State convention of the New Hampshire Prohibitionists was held at Weirs, N. H., July 13, and Rev. D. C. Knowles, D. D., of Tilton, was nominated for governor. We wish that it were possible to elect him governor of the Granite State. We should then expect some reformatory and aggressive work done in that commonwealth."
- commonwealth."

   Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D., writing from London for the Eeengelist, says: "It has always been my custom to spend a Saturday afternoon with Mr. Spurgeon whenever I was in London. Last Saturday, by the invitation of Mrs. Spurgeon and her son, Thomas, I went down to their beautiful home at "Westwood," near the Sydenham Crystal Palace, and had a most cordial reception. When I went into the deserted study and saw the empty arm-chair in which the glorious man had sat for so many years, I could not keep back the tears. Mrs. Spurgeon wept also when, after a few words of prayer, I bade her farewell. I was greatly charmed with Thomas Spurgeon's modest manliness and hearty cordiality. He looks like his illustrious father, except that he is a trifle tailer; and has made a noble beginning in the Metropolitan Tabernsole. His trumpet has the true ring."

   The funeral service of the late Mrs. Anna

The funeral service of the late Mrs. Anna — The funeral service of the late Mrs. Anna R. Latimer, who died at Andover, Mass., Bunday, July 8, was held at the chapel in Mt. Auburn Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon, July 10. The chapel was filled with relatives and friends from Auburndale, Boston, and Boston University, where her husband was professor and the distinguished Dean of the School of Theology for many years. The service was conducted by distinguished Dean of the School of Theology for many years. The service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. T. W. Bishon, assisted by Rev. Drs. Wm. R. Clark and Geo. M. Steele. She was buried at Mt. Auburn beside her husband. Mrs. Latimer has for two years been the teacher of English at Lasell Seminary, and endeared herself to her colleagues and pupils by the most rare qualities which made her, to all who knew her, a wonderful woman. her, a wonderful woman, a woman of great sweetness and strength, an inspiration to young and old. Lasell will keenly feel its loss. She leaves one daughter, Elizabeth S., a sister and a

Brieflets.

The Epworth Herald of July 14 is a bright and full educational number, with numerous il-

Superintendent Byrnes, of the New York Huperintendent styrnes, of the New York po-lice, in a contribution to the current number of the North American Review, attributes "most of the crime committed in New York city to two causes—drink and environment." He be-lieves that contaminating associations have greater influence than heredity.

The Baptists hold their twelfth Congress at Detroit, November 13-15. Leading clergymen and educators will prepare papers.

Says the London Baptist: "A little girl had been rummaging in her mother's trunk. There she found a 'church letter' which her mother she found a 'church letter' which her mother had neglected to present to the church into whose neighborhood she had moved. The little explorer rushed into her mother's presence, shouting: 'Oh, mamms, I have found your religion in your trunk!' There is a needle-like point in that story fer a great many people. With far too many the neglected church letter comes to be about the only part of the old church life remaining. But surely a trunk is a poor, dark, mothy piace for one's religion."

Revs. C. M. Melden, of Brockton, and W. J. Heath, of Hyde Park, will preach in the Tabernacie at Cottage City on Sunday, July 22. Dr. S. F. Upham will preach Sunday morning, July 29, under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Dr. L. B. Bates, assisted by Rev. P. E. Harvey, of Maryland, will begin a "pentecostal week" on Monday, July 30, continuing over Sunday, Aug. 5. On Sunday, Aug. 21, Rev. Frank C. Haddock, of Maine, will preach in the interests of the Woman's Home Missionin the interests of the Woman's Hou ary Society. The regular camp-meeting begins Aug. 19 and closes Aug. 28. Among the preschers of the week are Bishops Foster and Thoburn, Dr. W. H. Milburn, of Washington, Dr. C. E. Miller, of New York, and Rev. M. S. Hughes, of Portland, Me.

At the recent session of the Wesleyan Conference of Australia these interesting facts were revealed: The strength of the churches within its jurisdiction is: 2,715 churches, 645 ministers, 4,792 local preachers, 54,167 members, 183,100 acholars, and 455,871 adherents. These totals include the missions. The increase of members for the year was 2,654; the average increase dur-ing the last four years has been 2,713.

Over twenty-one years have passed since the University Extension movement started in Cambridge University, Eng. Appropriate notice was taken of this successful attainment of its majority by a convention hold at the University of London week before last. Over this convention such noted men as the Marquis of Stalibury, the Duke of Devonshire, and Lord Herschell, in turn, presided. Prof. Stuart settement of the profession such that there are now 100,000 Extension students in Great Britain alone. The movement mated that there are now 100,000 Extension students in Great Britain alone. The movement took root in Belgium last year, and 3,000 have thus far been enrolled in that country. The discussions of the convention were devoted principally to the development of the movement by extending the courses of instruction and by recognising advanced successes by higher certificates and possibly by the granting of some University degree.

The Union Signal is responsible for the ful-lowing very significant statements: "In this country 2,500 women are practicing medicine, 276 preaching the Gospel, more than 6,000 managing post-offices, and over 3,000,000 earning inde-pendent incomes. Since 1860 the patent office has granted over 2,500 patents to women, and in New York city 27,000 women support their hus-bands."

A growing patience is, perhaps, the surest proof of love and the shortest road to unself-ishness. There is in perfect patience a heroism not found on battle-fields. There are many not found on battle-fields. There are many kinds or developments of patience; patience of opinion, or the recognition of the intellectual rights of others; patience of pain, or the happy acceptance of the disagreeable; patience of waiting, or the willingness to do and go exactly as God directs. Patience is the opposite of intolerance, of complaint, and of hurry. It produces quietness, it implies meckness, it includes humility. It is the point at which to test high professions and to measure growth in grace. professions and to m asure growth in grace

The Independent says that "the article of Conybeare, in the October number of the Expositor, entitled, 'Aristion, the Author of the Last Twelve Verses in Mark,' is attracting deserved attention and discussion everywhere among New Testament echolars. Harnack, in the Theol. Literaturesting No. 23, gives a complete risums of the article in question, and closes with the statement that the status of the question is such that skepticism on the basis of argument is not in place. Others, too, practically express their agreement with Conybeare."

He fails, and he sione, who is false to his ideal, who comes short of that which God has made possible to him. He who deliberately lowers his moral standard for the sake of so-called suchis moral standard for the sake of so-called suc-cess, worldly success, makes the most fatal of all mistakes. He may not do any very bad things, he may be quite as good as the average of his class, but the one terrible fact remains — he has turned his back upon the light, he has not been true to his own particular reveistion. He has lost something out of his life, for which no amount of pelf or human praise can be any com-pensation. The high aroms of genuine goodness is gone. Failure is written scross his soul.

Deliberately turning the back upon truth ful-ly seen by clearest light is in the most emphatic sense the sin against the Holy Ghost. It leaves sense the sin against the Holy Ghost. It leaves no room for repentance through further enlightenment. It is entrance upon hopeless doom. We see not how any one can affirm with reference either to himself or anybody else that such a sin has been committed. It would te an "eternal sin." God only can decide as to its perpetration. Our business is to hope for the best and pour in more light, in the confident expectation that some new aspect of God's love will effect that change of heart which all previous revelations, of necessity partial, have vious revelations, of necessity partial, have failed to accomplish.

Some one has well said: "It is heaven on Some one has well said: "It is heaven on earth to have one's mind move in charity, reat in Providence, and turn upon the poles of trath." A lengthy essay on each of these essentials to true happiness would not exhaust them or do justice to their importance. If charity or love controls the thought so that nothing contrary thereto is admitted, if the soul is completely freed from worry by its calm, unwavering trust in a Heaveniy Father, and if truth is sovereign in all one's intellectual operations so that nothing which savors of falsity or error is knowingly given any acceptance, life will be of knowingly given any acceptance, life will be of a rare and royal quality such as might well be signated heaven upon earth

The twelfth season of the Old South La for Young People, given in the Old South Meet-ing House, Wednesday atternoons, at 3 o'clock, begins Aug. 1. The general subject is, "The Founders of New England," with the following eminent lecturers: Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, "William Browster, the Elder of Plymouth;" Rev. William Elilot Griffs, "William Bradford, the Governor of Plymouth;" Hon. Frederic T. Greenhalge, "John Winthrop, the Governor of Massachusetts;" Mr. William R. Thayer, "John Harvard, and the Founding of Berrard College;" Rev. Laws. De Normardie. Thayer, "John Harvard, and the Founding of Harvard College;" Rev. James De Normandie, "John Ellot, the Apostie to the Indians;" Rev. John Cotton Brooks, "John Cotton, the Mirister of Boston;" President E. Benjamin Andrews, "Roger Williams, the Founder of Rhode isj-and;" Rev. Joseph H. Twichell, "Thomas Hook-er, the Founder of Connecticut." To young and old alike these lectures will prove of the greatest value.

The Sunday School.

THIRD QUARTER. LESSON V. Sunday, July 29. Luke 2 : 40-52.

Rev. W. O. Holway, U. S. N. THE YOUTH OF JESUS.

I. Preliminary.

- Golden Text: And Janus increased in wirds re and in favor with God and man. -- Luke 2: 84.
- 2. Bate: A. D. 8, in April.
- Places: Masareth and Jerusalem
- Home Readings: Monday Luke 2: 40-53. Tuo-day Dent. 18: 1-8. Weinesley Matt. 13: 53-58. Tuo-day Col. 2: 13-30. Fidday Prov. 6: 1-4. Saturday -Prov. 3: 1-8. Bunday Prov. 3: 1-8.

II. Introductory.

To finite minds it is a problem how the Child of Nazareth could be a genuine child and pass through successive stages of development. We instinctively associate growth with imperfection of knowledge, and it seems to degrade our conception of the infinite perfections of our Lord and Saviour to suppose that there was ever a moment from His birth to His death when He was not in the full possession of His su-perhuman faculties. It is incomprehensible to us that the Omniscient could ever, for one moment, be less than omniscient; and if omniscient, the idea of growth in wisdom is necessarily excluded. Our only resort is is necessarily excluded. Our only resort is to treat the whole subject as a sacred mystery and accept in reverent faith what we cannot understand by reason. Our logic breaks down the moment we attempt to analyze the nature and conditions of the Incarnation. The common explanation, that Jesus was endowed with a truly human soul as well as body, and that under these that Jesus was endowed with a truly human soul as well as body, and that under these finite conditions growth was possible, and that His full divine consciousness was held in abeyance till He reached the stature of manhood, even if true, is by no means satisfying. The truth remains, that we cannot solve the problem of Christ's personality. "It is too high: we cannot attain unto it," Our own natures are full of mystery — infinitely more so that of our Lord. nitely more so that of our Lord.

At the age of twelve Jesus was carried by His parents to Jerusalem to attend the Passover. No record is left to us of the emotions with which He gazed for the first time upon the city where all the previous history of the nation centred. "We know not whether, He understood at that early are the classification of the care the care that the care the classification of the care that the care the ca age the significance of the symbolism of the feast, and comprehended that He would be called upon in due time to fulfill those solcalled upon in due time to failil! those solemn types;" but it seems certain that what He saw aroused in Him a spirit of inquiry so unquenchable that He lingered in the city after the caravan, with which his parents journeyed, had departed. They sup-posed Him to be in the company, but His eager feet had carried Him to the Temple precincts; and when discovered after a three days' absence, He was sitting among the astonished doctors, "both hearing them and asking them questions." To His mother's chiding question and complaint He re-turned the calm reply, so full of mystery and meaning, like one of His parables, and yet so simple and natural and unstudied— "Wist ye not that I must be about Me. "Wist ye not that I must be about My Fa-ther's business?" They were amazed at this reply, and failed to catch its meaning. The Jewish mind was not familiar with the conception of Jehovah as "our Father which art in heaven." That came to the world in the after teaching of Him who had just now, seemingly, become conscious of His divine relationship.

It was wonderful to see the Holy Child, checked in the full tide of His eager questioning and filled with the new consciousness of His sublime destiny, rising with prompt obedience to His feet, and turning when the companions has been also been the companions by the companions of the companions has a companions between the companions and the companions of the companions submissively from the companionship and converse of these venerable teachers, to follow His parents to Nazareth, and enter upon the lowly duties of the village carpen-ter. Neverdid filial obedience receive such a eration as in this dutiful child Jesus Eighteen silent, unrecorded years passed before His ministry began.

III. Expository.

40. The child grew - passed through the us-40. The child grew — passed through the unual stages of bodily development, from childhood to youth, etc. The same thing is said of John (chap. 1: 80). Waxed — increased. In spirit — an interpolation, taken probably from chap. 1: 80, and rejected by the R. V. The words "waxed strong" refer, therefore, to physical vigor. Filled with wisdom. — Note the difference between learning and wisdom. To be well-informed, to accumulate facts of science or history, does not necessarily make a man wise. The "wisdom" of Jesus did not come from the schools. Prayer, the Scriptures, the book of nature, unceasing communion with the Life di-vine—these constituted His nurture and "filled Him with wisdom." The grace of God.—The Divine favor rested manifestly and increasingly upon Him.

He had a true human soul as well as body. He was a gentine, natural child, infant and boy (Whedon).— We hot-bed preceding marked the holiest of infancies (Rebertaca).— We know that He was childlike like other children, for in after years IIIs brethren thought His fame strange, and His towasmen rejected Him (Rulo).— He grew as other children grow, only in a childhood of stainless and shiless beauty (Farrar).— Evil aleas had no growth within Him. Nothing tarnished the exquisits purity of His soul.

quisits parity of His soni.

41. His parents went — were accustomed to go. Three times a year adult males were required to present themselves before the Lord in the Temple (Ex. 34: 23). Females were not required either by law or custom to attend. Says Farar: "Mary, in pious remembrance of the rule recommended by Hillel, accompanied her husband every year." Passover — celebrated about the time of our April; lasted seven days originally, but the sighth — "the great day of the feast" — had been added; called also " the teast of unleavened bread" (Mark 14: 1); commemorated the passing-over of the Hebrew house at the smiting of the first-born in Egypt; was attended by immense multitudes who " might be counted by tens of thousands."

42. Twelve years old — the age at which a

42. Twelve years old—the age at which a Hebrew boy became "a son of the law," and assumed its responsibilities. At this age, too, he was graduated from the treatment of a child; he could not be sold as a siave by his parents; he was required to learn a trade; he could be presented in the synagogue; he could wear the phylacteries; he could finish the Mishna and begin the study of the Talmud.

At this age, according to Jewish legend, Moses left the house of Pharach's daughter; Samuel heard she Voice which aummoned him to the prophetic office; Solomon gave the judgment which first revealed his possession of wisdom; and Josiah first dreamed of his great reform. Bay, more, eccording; to one Rabbininosi treatite, up to this age a boy only possessed the nephech, or animal life; but henceforth he began to acquire the reach, or apirit, which, if his life were virtuous, would develop, at the age of twenty, into the mishema, or reasonable soul (Parray).

43. Fulfilled the days — the passover week.
Jesus tarried behind. — The reason for this Jeans tarried behind.—The reason for this lingering is given further on. He was spending His time with the wise men—the doctors of the law—apparently so sugaged that He overlooked the termination of the featival. Knew not of it.—They supposed He was in the caravan and would find them in the progress of the journey. He was so decile and wise and mature that no anxiety would be felt about Him. Then, too, His present age was about equal to that of eight-een or twenty with us—an age when He could be trusted to take care of Himself.

Says Schaff: "His action was occasioned by an irre-statible longing to remain in the sacred city and in the house of God. This longing He gratified without con-sulting those to whom He ordinarily owed obedience Such condust would have been disobedience, implying moral imperfection, if Jesus were not more than man The sole instification is in the higher relationship He

44. Went a day's journey—usually from eighteen to twenty miles. The first day's journey was commonly much shorter. Hackett is of the opinion that the halt for the first day was made at the castern foot of the Mount of Olives, not more than two hours' ride from Jerusalem, to the second opening in the hostile section. not more than two hours rice from Jerusalem, so as to avoid camping in the hostile region south of Jericho. An old tradition makes their first hait at El-Birch, eight or ten miles north of Jerusalem. Kinsfolk and acquaintance—of Jerusalem. Kinsfolk and acquainthance—who formed part of the caravan.

45, 46. Turned back . . . . seeking him—on the way. Farrar draws a vivid picture of the perilous political condition of the country at this time, which he thinks would greatly augment the slarm of Joseph and Mary. After three days—either three full days in seeking, or, which is more probable, they took a day in going, a day in seeking, and a day in returning. It is strange that they did not seek Him at once in the Temple. Temple—in one of the porohen, where the rabbis instructed the people. Stating in the midst of the doctors.—Pupils often stood, but Paul speaks of being brought up at the feet of Gamailel. Ellicott says: "The older students ast on a low bench; the younger on the ground, literally at the feet of their instructor." Bohaff says: "The custom in the East is for scholars to sit cross-legged on the floor." Both hearing them and asking them questions—the usual behavior of a learner. Jesus was not playing rabbi, as the language seems to imply.

seems to imply.

47. Were astonished (R. V., "amazed") at his understanding. — Doubtless He showed a wonderful insight into the spiritual meaning of the Law — so profound for a child of His age as to excite their amazement. His answers. — Judging from His answer to His mother shortly after, these "answers" must have indicated a rare degree of wisdom and spiritual fervor. It was a kind of Bible class; and many teachers will agree with a learned rabbi, who says: "I have learned much from the rabbis, my teachers; I have learned more from the rabbis, my search that the tone of reproach which pervades this question seems justifiable. Thy father.—Publicly Joseph bore this relation. Mary had not yet, in all probability, revealed to her Son the mystery of His birth. Sorrowing.— "The pain we suffer is of necessity proportioned to the love we beat" (Augustine).

Not merely was this the only possible manner in which Mary could publicly speak to her Son of Joseph, but also an indisputable proof of the wisdom with which shorought up the Child—a wisdom with which shorought up the Child—a wisdom who taught her to say nothing yet to Him of the mystery of His birth, and which had faith enough to wait until His own consciousness should be fully and olsarly awakened to the fact of His being the Son of God. The more surprising, therefore, must His answer have seemed to His mother, as containing a hint, intelligible to her aione, that He aiready knew who His father was (Van Ocatersee).

Anew who His father was (Van Ocatersee).

40. How is it that ye sought me? — That is, why did ye not come here at once? Where else should I be found except in My Father's house? Wist ye not? — Did ye not know? My Father's contrasts with the words "thy father" in Mary's question. "This is that 'must's often used by our Lord of His appointed and undertaken course! (Alford). "He delicately recalls to them the fading memory of all that they did know; in that 'I must' He lays down the sacred law of self-sacrifice by which He was to walk, even to the death of the cross" (Farrar). The R. V. translates the words "My Father's house;" literally the rendering is, "in My Father's house;" literally the rendering is, "in My Father's things."

He claims God as lite Father, and not only justifies His

He claims God as His Father, and not only justifies His conduct by this claim, but expresses the conviction that they should have recognized It. This is the first recorded atterance of Jesus, and in it the Divine-human-self-consciousness is manifest (Schaff).

They understood not — did not fully comprehend Him; therefore He did not derive this saying of His from them.

Ne wonder they did not understand. In these days, men, after all the light from Christ's life, after all the evidences of ills power in the Christian centuries, fall to understand this saying of His respecting His own per-son (Schaff).

51, 52. Went down with them—left the Temple and its wisdom behind Him, to tread the lowly, secluded walks of filial obedience. His mother kept all these sayings.—No further mention is made of Joseph, who probably died before our Lord's public ministry began. Increased in wisdom—aven though plying the creased in wisdom — even though plying the humble trade of a carpenter in an obscure coun-try village; but His was "the wisdom that com-eth down from above." In stature — or "age." He ripened, physically and mentally, with His dvancing years.

Advancing years.

It was during this time that much of the great work of the second Adam was done. The growing up through infanoy, childhood, youth, manhood, from grace to grace, holiness to holiness, in subjection, self-denial, and leve, without one poliuting touch of sin, this it is, which, consummated by the three years of active ministry, by the passion, and by the cross, constituted "the obedience of snie man," by which many were made righteons (allord).

IV. Illustrative.

1. The questions of a child are often more embarrassing, by their artiess depth, than the arguments of the most consummate dialectician. They go straight to the truth by the royal road of simplicity. There was not a white-haired rabbi in the schools of the law who could meet the questions of this Child of Nazareth (Presense).

2. Jesus grew up among a people seldom and only contemptuously named by the ancient clasics; in a remote and conquered province of the Roman Empire; in the darkest district of Palestine; in a little country town of proverbial insignificance; in poverty and manual labor; in the obscurity of a carpenter's shop; far away from universities, academies, libraries, and literary society; without any help, so far as we know, except the parental care, the daily wonders of nature, the Old Testament Scriptures, the weekly synagogue services in Nazareth, the the weekly synagogue services in Nazareth, the annual festivals in Jerusalem, and the secret in-tercourse of His soul with God, His Heavenly

3. Among those present [of the doctors in the temple] may have been, white with the snows of well-nigh a hundred years, the great Hillel, one of the founders of the Masorsh, whom snows of well-nigh a hundred years, the great Hillel, one of the founders of the Masorah, whom the Jews almost reverence as a second Moses; and his son, the Rabbah Simeon, who thought so highly of silence; and his grandson, the refined and liberal Gamaliel; and Shammal, his great rival, a teacher who numbered a still vaster host of disciples; and Hanan, or Annas, His future judge; and Boethas, the father-in-law of Herod; and Babha Ben Butah, whose eyes Herod had put out; and Nechaniah Ben Hiskanah, so celebrated for his victorious prayers; and Johahan Ben Zacchai, who predicted the destruction of the Temple; and the wealthy Joseph of Arimathes; and the timid but earnest Nicodemus; and the youthful Jonathan Ben Uzsiel, who subsequently wrote the celebrated Chaldee paraphrase, and was held by his contemporaries in boundless honor. But though none of these might conjecture who was before them, and though hardly one of them lived to believe on Him, and some to oppose Him in years to come, which of them all would not have been charmed at a glorious and noble-hearted boy, in all the early beauty of His life, who though the had never learned in the schools of the rabbis, yet showed so marrelous a wisdom, and so deep a knowledge in all things divine? (Parrar.)

F. W. KIRSKAN & Co.: Kind Priends — I wish to tell you what Adamson's liotanic Balsan has done for me. I want to tell you what Adamson's liotanic Balsan has done for me. I want to be without a line of the control of power Peculiar to Itself, not pos-sessed by other medicines. Hood's arsaparilla

00D'S Sarsaparilla is carefully prepared by experienced pharmacists from Sarsa-parilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock. Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies. The Combination, Proarsaparilla, giving it strength and curative

Cures Serofula, Salt Rheum, Sores, Boils, Pimples and all other affections caused by d; Dyspepsia, Bilionsness, Sick Indigestion, Debility, Catarrh, adache, Indigestion, Debility, Catarrh cumatism, Kidney and Liver Cour plaints. It is Not Wha we Say, but what Hood's Sarsaparilla Does, that

Tells the Story - Hood's URES

In m soup awa Gua did, sust It for it of g men firm affir

souli to m tion Met quit Zior rials soul coul Tr chur movey o Chri bugs som al hast he chur the chur t

nece Mos Stat tion depl chur to fe unai and tian ativ the cits c floor maimi mae there is christiand ing land he t ful t

Hood's Pills are gentle, mild and effective

SKINS ON FIRE with torturing, dis-figuring eczemas and every species of itching, burning, and scaly skin and scalp diseases relieved by a single application and speedily cured by CUTICURA when the best physicians, hospitals, and all else fails. Bold throughout the world. Price, CUTIOURA, 50c.; POAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Hole Proprietors Boaton.

SUFFERERS, ATTENTION!

BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and other of the Kidneys, Bladder and Stomach

Information free which will astound and convince the most skeptical.

Rev. Dr. L. E. HALL. Pastor First Baptist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss. Or, P. O. Box No. 700, New Orleans, La.

CONSTIPATION CURED

For every evil under the sun There is a remedy or there's none; For Constipation and all it's faults The cure is found in Laxative Salz.

Bubler's Laxative Salz

80 cts. per bottle. Druggists everywhere. Write to Nathan G. Bubler, Ph. G., Lynn, Mass., for ook on Constipation. Sent free.

CANCER and Tumor removed and permanently careful without knife, plaster, or poison. Pamphlet sent free. Address, Swed. Med. Co., Lynn., Mass.

Morphine Habit EASILY GURED For Sale by all Druggists or sent on receipt of $1.00.
THE ONIO CHEMICAL WORKS, Lima, Ohio

? Why ? Look Like This DENT'S TOOTHACHE COM Don't Taxa Derrations. All dealer or send life to

EPWORTH GUARDS.

THE editorial in the HERALD of Feb. 28 on "A Harmful Innovation." aroused in me a vigorous protest that I have vainly sought to suppress. The protest was not awakened by the assault on the Epworth Guards, but because the assault was uncandid, and because no proof was produced to nstain the charges.

It was uncandid, first, because it assumed for the Guards what none of its advo for the Guards what the carrying of guns and swords aids in developing Christian manliness. It was uncandid, second, because it pictured the Guards as doing what no sensible pastor or advocate of th ne organi would permit: their marching into church as an "armed body of young men." Such a thing has never, to my knowledge, been done even on Memorial Sunday by the Grand Army or their escort.

The editorial declares the Epworth

Guards " a most pernicious institution," " a vicious military feature," and that it is " out of harmony with the spirit of Christianity."
"The church," it affirms, "is suffering from it, and it is hurtful to the Epworth gue." But not an instance of its perni-us or vicious influence is given; nor is a single case cited where a church has suf-fered, or an Epworth League has been harmed by it. Hence these statements are entitled only to the weight of assertions un-pported by a single fact.

What is the farther proof advanced? It is asked, "How can the carrying of guns and instruments of slaughter - aid in the development of Christian manliness? It will suffice here to ask how the carrying of guns and swords hinders the development of Christian manliness? Can it be af-firmed that it does? "Methodism," it is affirmed, "is set for the care of men's sonls," and on this account has no business to meddle with such things. An applica-tion of this principle would rule out of Methodism many things now in, including quite a portion of the weekly contents of Zion's Herald, not excepting the editorials. But suppose the military feature puts soils under the care of Methodism that she could not otherwise reach, what then? The movement does not commit church to the policy of the Roman Catholic Church. As well charge that the deacon ment commits Methodism to the policy of the Roman Catholic Church. If the Christian Church is frightened by such a bugaboo from making a proper use of what some one misuses, she will soon be robbed of all aggressiveness, and be ready for a hasty and decent burial.

But the strangest part of the editorial is the expressed fear that the Epworth Guards may "become a feeder to the State militia —that fearful maelstrom which has sucked down thousands of promising young men." Is there truth in the charge against the State militia? And if the charge is true, is it not the strongest argument for the organization in the church of the Epworth Guards? The second amendment to the Constitution of the United States declares "a well-regulated militia necessary to the security of a free State." Most of the State constitutions require a State militia. Militia, then, is a constituional necessity. And if the militia is in the deplorable condition charged, has not the church a duty, a mission, to it? The call to foreign mission work is loud and importanate. Money and promising young men and women are sought and sent into de-graded, deprayed, heathen lands to Christianise the people. The voice of the Christian press urges upon the church the imper-ative duty of staying the ingulfing power of the fearful heathen maelstrom, by sending its choicest men and women into the awful flood to the work of rescue; but Zion's Health lifts its voice in warning against a similar work in the "fearful State militia massistrom" in our own land. Why should the editor be so greatly alarmed lest some n young men, through the Epworth ter the State militia? Is he willing to trust the young men in heathen lands, but not in the State militia? Does he think it more important or more hopeful to attempt to Christianize heathen lands than the State militia? Ought he not to urge the church to send her promising young men into the State militia until the whole organization is leavened and purified? Ought he not to welcome the Epworth Guards as a training school in the church for this church mission field? And ought he not, if consistent, to lift a warning voice spainst all instruction in our schools and ges, in all studies bearing upon the sci-of government, lest our church los become feeders of politics—"that fearful maelstrom which has sucked down thousands of promising young men?" Are the young men and boys in the Ep-worth League and Junior League in num-bers proportionate to the young women and girls? The ratio of boys and young men to girls and young women in these or-ganizations is about as one to four, or less ! Where are the boys and young men, and how can the church reach them? is the vital question of the times. The Epworth Guards — Boys' Brigade — is an attempt to reach the boys and young men. The mili-tary idea does captivate boys and young men. They can be brought into a church organisation, within the reach and influ-ence of that which aids in developing Christian manliness, by the use of the "military idea." All that is claimed for this "military idea" is that it brings within the influence of Christian training many who other-wise would not be reached. And if the young men and boys will not come in to the "supper," is it not in harmony with the spirit of Christianity for the church to "go out into the highways and hedges, and com-pel them to come in" even with the "miliry idea?" Are not Paul's words in 1 Cor. 9:19-22 a justification of the use of the "military idea," If it is a means to save

A Christian pastor in the city of Brooklyn talked with me for more than an hour about his Boys' Brigade. He was enthusiastic in its praise. It was conducted by an earnest, well-trained, Christian military of-Boys from the street, homworse than homeless, had been reached. Membership necessitated attendance at reaching service and Sunday-school, and among the most regular attendants at these services were the members of the Boys' Brigade. Week by week these boys were became recruiting officers for the Boys' Brigade — yes, missionaries for Ohrist. While he talked, I said to myself, "Oh, that I had an intelligent, Christian military officer in my church — I would have Epworth Guards!" being led to Christ, and among their mates

Is it unkind to say, Away with epithet writing and sweeping denunciation of plans born of Christian brains and hearts to meet a crying need, until some better plan is pro-

Let the church give the Epworth Guards a fair trial, and the movement will vindicate itself on its own merits, or be set aside by its own fallure.

Waterville, Me.

QUEEN CITY LETTER.

HERE is very little "doing," as John Bull says, in religious circles in Cincinnati, for the churches are suffering from a very general summer exodus.

St. John's Church has just closed a home camp-meeting that lasted a week, holding open-air services every night in front of the church, with a cornet and a cades chorus to lead the singing.

Wesley Chapel is to have an annex this summer in a playground, created out of the old graveyard adjoining the church, where many of the pioneer Methodists were buried. The Crusaders, a band of eighteen young men, was organized as an outcome of a recent revival, and their first war has been waged against the debris in the lot. After clearing it, they built a high fence around it, and the grounds will be fitted up with seats for spectators and stocked with everything necessary for baseball, football, tenthing necessary for baseball, football, tennis and other games. All games and all improvements made are to become the permanent property of the church, and only about $125 will be needed to properly equip the grounds, about $50 of which is already in hand. Wesley Chapel has taken the initiative in copying the English idea of utilizing vacant spaces in cities for playgrounds, and it is to be hoped that at an early day every available foot of ground in the city will be occupied in the same way

St. Paul's Church celebrated its seventyfifth anniversary a few weeks ago with a three days' jubilee. The chief features of ion were serm ons by Rev. C. H. Payne, D. D., and Rev. H. B. Ridgaway, D. D., both former pastors, a platform made ing presided over by Bishop Joyce, where the speeches were reminiscent in their character, and a reunion that took the shape of a reception and banquet. Its history of thre quarters of a century takes the church back to Brimstone Corner, that was evacuated later for Morris Chapel. In 1870 St. Paul's was built, taking rank as the foremost Methodist church in the city. In reporting the century of service, and God only knows what Methodism shall be when St. Paul's comes to her centenary celebration." "Cin-cinnatus" does not feel much concern for Methodism twenty-five years hence, but doubts whether St. Paul's faces the future with this imputed boldness. Rev. George K. Morris, D. D., with his exceptional pul-pit abilities, has been able to sustain his congregations during his five years' pas-torate at St. Paul's; but the church has had severe losses in membership and financially has been falling behind. It is a matter of great regret that Dr. Morris' call to Boston will take him out of the Conference in the will take him out of the Conference in the fall. Cincinnati can ill afford the generosity she shows in furnishing Boston with such a triumvirate as Dr. Brodbeck, Dr. Banks and Dr. Morris. How does Boston propose to repay her obligations? Rev. I. M. Meeker, D. D., who was in the city a few weeks ago looking over the field, comes from Hacketstown, N. J., to fill St. Paul's pulpit.

The coming events of the fall Conference are casting long shadows, and preachers and laymen are both having a hand in trying to shape the appointments for the coming year. There is a great deal of floating cture that may all be reversed when the Conference convenes.

is rumored that Rev. C. W. Rishell, D. D., of Asbury Chapel, will accept a call to the presidency of Berea College, and that Rev. H. C. Weakley, D. D., will sever his connection as financial secretary of Christ's Hospital after having been phenomenally successful in his work in its behalf.

One of the local dailies announces that Rev. C. W. Barnes, pastor of Central M. E. Church, Springfield, O., has informed his congregation that he has requested his pre-siding elder to transfer him to another field

It is very probable that Rev. E. O. Bux-ton, who is completing his fifth year at Franklin Street Church, Cleveland, will be transferred to Avondale in the fall. Mr. Buxton has made a very successful record, and it is hoped that there will be no unfore een hitch in effecting the transfer.

Walnut Hills is to be congratulated on the return of Dr. McChesney from the South in very much improved health, and on the prospect of his probable return for the com-

At Lockland, Rev. Adam Bowers, D. D., will take a supernumerary relation in the fall, on account of impaired health, leaving his successor a strong church in a prosperous condition.

The probabilities point to a change in the eldership of the Cincinnati District, and Rev. R. H. Rust, D. D., is named for the office. With the growing disposition to re-gard the presiding eldership as a superflu-ous piece of mechanism, it is a question whether the church can afford to take a man like Dr. Rust, who hardly has a peer as a pastor in the Conference, out of the reg-ular work, to put his shoulder to a fifth wheel. The plan of locating the elder at a church where his duties will not be exacting enough to prevent his looking after all the ssary requirements of the eldership, is finding favor in some quarters. Dr. Rust was down for the Hamilton District last fall before a committee of iconoclastic laymen ded in having it dropped, and was sent as the only alternative to Mt. Auburn, where he has been handleapped because he has had to divide the territory with a new German Methodist Church planted just a stone's throw away from his charge. Most of the Germans on Mt. Auburn are only nom inally Germans, and there was no racial obstacle, save a German grandfather, in the way of their lending their strength to the church already occupying the ground. In the beginning German Methodism was simply an expedient to make Methodists of the Germans who had not been in this country long enough to have learned the language; but in these latter days it is becoming a hothouse to keep alive the German lang and traditions. Every effort is made to keep the second and third generations from gravitating into the English churches. There is no valid reason why the primary classes in the Sunday-schools si aught in German, why the Epworth Leagues should not unite in the mass meetings of the district, or why meetings of general interest should not be announced from the German pulpits. It is unfortunate, in view of the present tendencies, that the rift was made in creating separate German Confer-

Buckeye Street German Church has a new $34,000 edifice, and has rented its old buildanniversary, the Western says: "The church ing to the Salvation Army, who are ready starts out boldly for another quarter of a to glean where the Methodists have failed to garner. The Army have their headquarters in the old German Theatre, where our Olty Church Extension Society experionly Unuron Extension Society experi-mented with Sunday afternoon services, and are planning for a camp-meeting at Epworth Heights this summer, with a full brass band, after the Methodist camp has adjourned. Imbidding the Army Godspeed, Methodism cannot afford to surrender any of her old vantage-ground.

WHY?

Bev. G. W. B

Rev. G. W. Bussell.

Readers of World-Wide Missions must have been deeply impressed with the April number. Rev. W. N. Brewster's story of Hing Hua and the embarrassments occasioned by the rapid growth of his work in China must have caused every spark of Christian aympathy to flame for the relief of our foreign missions. His picture of open doors, eager multitudes, nato flame for the relief of our foreign missions. His picture of open doors, eager multitudes, native workers, seanty means and a retreating church, was enough to stir sluggish souls. Providential openings promising large and immediate returns for small investments, are liable to be closed for want of a little more money. This courageous missionary is ready to seerifice the interests of his family to provide the Gospal for the heathen, but unless relief shall come for the heathen, but unless relief shall come through our missionary treasury very soon, this distressing reduction of over one-ninth of his appropriation will necessitate the abandon-ment of the devotees and victims of idolatry to their dull, dark fate.

Similar paralysis is felt all along the line of similar paralysis is fett all along the line of our vast missionary operations, and the question naturally arises: Why this orippling of our forces at the far-off outposts of the work? Why this painful embarrasament of the heroic elements of our church who are out against the solid walls of pagan darkness bravely battling for life and humanity? Is it because the benevolent feelings of our church are allowed to slumber? Is is because we have failed slumber? Is in because we have falled to make fervid appeals to the instincts of pure benevolence which must exist in every be-liever's heart? Doubtless this is a general ex-planation.

Vet is there not a subordinate but more or less vital and direct cause in the liberal appropriations for our home work? In New Hampshire and other old Conferences is not some of this precious missionary money misapplied? That we have some poor charges which need a little help, no one questions; but when churches can pay their pastors from $500 to $800, or even more, why pile shove this a generous missionary portion? It may be all right, but some of us cannot understand why churches which pay from $300 to $500 should struggle and pinch to raise a little missionary money to go to ministers who receive two dollars for every dollar paid to their own hard-working, diligent preacher. All would be willing to economise and practice self-denial to help such men as Mr. Brewster, Bishop Taylor, any of our self-escrificing foreign missionaries or pioneers on the frontier; for their fresh, growing needs appeal to the real benevolent impulses of the church, to the tenderest and strongest emotions of the human heart. But how can we appeal with any intelligent ardor to working girls, poor widows, and barofoot children, to contribute their mite if it is to go to already well-fed ministers in New England and elsewhere? If it is according to the principles Yet is there not a subordinate but more or less already well-fed ministers in New Engine If it is according to the principles and spirit of true benevolenes to withhold aid from the degraded, ignorant and despairing vic-tims of a cruel and fatal religion, mutely pleading for the light and bread of life, and at the same time assist quite generously old fields abounding in wealth and splendid materials for useful converts, then it seems necessary for us abounding in weeks then it seems necessary for us to reconstruct our theories of benevolence upon a new code of ethics. Why should we not be even suffer through scant support in order to push an army of waiting missionaries far out into the opening regions of heathenism's hope-less night?

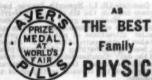

Methodism was never created for retrandd with a living compensation at home, or less night? Methodism was never created for retrenchment or retreat. After a splendid century of aggressiveness, why sit down in selfish ease before open doors?

Marlboro, N. H.

World's Fair

Family PHYSIC

The Conferences.

New England Conference.

Boston South District.

South Boston, St. John's.—The Epworth League conducted a temperance meeting at Mor-gan Chapel, Boston, one evening of last week.

Wollaston.—The pastor's son and namesaks, Chas. W. Wilder, jr., has been strending Adams Academy, Quincy, the past year. He received the first prize for scholarship, also the prize for the best translation from Clearo into English.

Sterling Camp-ground. — Rev. A. F. Herrick is serving as chaplain for the seventh year. Public services began for this season July 8, with a sermon by Mr. Herrick.

Boston East District.

Crescent Beach.—Rev. J. E. Waterhouse, pas-tor, took part in the recent convention of "Open Air Workers," held here June 38. Drs. Gordon and Plumb delivered addresses.

Asbury Gross Camp-ground.— Over three hundred were present at the Sunday school last Sunday. At 2.30 P. M. Dr. L. B. Hates preached to a congregation of more than seven hundred people upon "The Great Reformation." About 180 families are upon the grounds. Many people of other denominations stopping near the camp attend the Sabbath services.

U.

N. E. Southern Conference.

Providence District.

June 17 was an interesting day in Emmonial Charch, Mansfeld, when the pastor, Rev. C. E. Besis, preached the baccalaureste sermon before the graduating class of the high school, superintendent, school committee and teachers of the public schools. Three persons have recently been received on probation at Mansfeld and 3 also at Foxboro. Two were received into full membership at Mansfield July 1, and one at Foxboro. The Stoughton Epworth League entertained plessantly the Mansfield League, June 38. The occasion was a delightful one. During the absence of the pastor in August the pulpit will be supplied by Rev. D. P. Leavitt.

The average attendance of the Sunday-school will be supplied by Rev. D. P. Leavitt.

The average attendance of the Sunday-school in Woonscoket for the last quarter is the largest in its history. At the close of last year the pastor, Rev. J. Oldham, called the attention of the church to the fact that more men than women attended the class-meetings; but this is no longer true, the women now take the lead. Dr. P. D. Blakeslee's lifustrated lecture on "Venice," given in this church some time since, was rishly enjoyed by all who heard it. The Epworth League of this church is a live institution and does much to help the church inancially as well as spiritually and intellectually. League anniversary day was celebrated May 16. The pastor preached to the young people in the morning from the subject "Men Wanted," and in the evening an excellent program. whe provided and executed by the local chapter. Mr. Oldham spends the entire summer with his people, with the exception of a few days' attendance at the camp-meetings. During the month of June five children were baptized.

Children's Day was a decided success at the Children's Day was a decided success at the church in Attlebore. In the morning the pastor, Rev. G. E. Brightman, spoke on "The Pilgrims at Piymouth." In the evening the concert was attended by seven hundred persons. Mr. Brightman gave the address before the graduating class of the grammar school. The Bunday-school is constantly growing, so that the problem now is how to take care of the many who are thronging hither. Already several classes meet in the saudience-room of the church. F. W. Lincoln is the superintendent. Excellent congregations attend the presching service and tracquently there are two hundred present at the Teasday evening prayer-meeting. This vigorous church is doing a grand work for God and the Epoworth League connected with Hacen

The Epworth League connected with Haven Uhurch, East Providence, gave a reception a few weeks aince to Bev. C. E. Besis, of Mansfield, president of the Epworth Leagues of the Providence District. The attendance was large. After the reception the president gave an interacting address. There were also musical and literary exercises succeeded by a collation. The occasion was one of real interest and profit to the local League.

X. X. X.

The next session of the Ministerial Association s to be at Stafford Springs in October, and the intrict convention of the Epworth League is to be held at South Manchester.

The Burnside Methodist Church receives a legacy from Mrs. Martha Olmsted, which will enable them to remove the debt from their new church. It will amount to at least $4,000, and may possibly reach as high as $5,000.

may possibly reach as high as $5,000.

The church property at Moodus has lately been improved by the addition of a barn, making the parsonage and its surroundings an attractive hame for the prescher. Pastor Newell and family take a short trip to Woodstock, Vt., where he has a pleasant and productive farm. Each year he spends a few weeks there. He has entirely recovered from his attack of nervous prostration. Mrs. Sarak Smith, widow of the late Rev. Hefton Smith, of this Conference, has been recently successfully treated for a rose cancer by Dr. V. S. Cook, of Moodus. She naturally feels deeply grateful to the skillful physician who has so successfully coped with this dreaded disease usually considered incurable. As a specialist in this line the doctor is thoroughly endersed by his pastor, Rev. W. U. Newell.

The Glendale (R. I.) Epworth League had a

The Glendale (R. I.) Epworth League had a great clam-bake on the 4th of July at Herring Pond in Sliss Harding; grove by Sandy Beach. The number in attendance were large in spite of counter attractions of public and private clam-bakes in other parts of the town. Athlette sports, boating and bathing added to the pleasures of the day. Commendations of the enterprise and the success of the League in this undertaking show the common sentiment of the townspeople.

Rev. Irad Taggart has entered heartily into his work at North Charlestows and West Unity. The people are much pleased. The parsonage has undergone a great transformation. Paint, paper, and whitewash cover a multitude of twenty of the townspeople.

townspeople.

At Greene, B. I., the church was beautifully decorated with flowers and foliage for Children's Day by the ladies of the ecolety. The sermon in the morning was to the children, who were seated together, the pastor, Rev. C. B. Bromley, speaking to them, literally from a garden of flowers. The evening concert was a new feature of church work for that place and attracted a congregation too large for the capacity of the house. Many came a distance of several miles. Sunday, June 3, was observed as Memorial Day. Members of the G. A. R. and other veterans of the war from Pheuix, B. I., had been invited and attended to the number of 150. After appropriate religious services in the cemetry and decoration of the graves of comrades, services were held in the Methodist church. The pastor preached the sermon. The congregation numbered over 450. Remarks were also made on the occasion by Messrs. Harris, Moon, and McGregor.

McGregor.

The Willimantie Junior League has recently purchased a fine map of Palestine at a cost of $6, for the use of the Bunday-achool. They, have also secured and paid for a pew in the church for the use of strangers at public worship. On it they have placed a card with the inscription: "Junior League Pew — Welcome." July 1, the pastor, Rev. O. W. Scott, received 7 persons into full connection and 7 by certificate. Four have recently been received to probation. One of these was a converted German Catholic.

recently been received to probation. One of these was a converted German Catholic.

The people of Moosup showed their appreciation of the return of Rev. E. P. Pursaner by a surprise and presentation of a mammoth May-basket one evening in May. The Sunday-school and other departments of the church were represented in the affair. One hundred and fifty persons filled the parsonage. The basket contained offerings both substantial and artistic, and also a purse of money. Children's Day was observed by an illustrated sermon to the children on "Ants." and by an excellent concert in the evening, using the program of the "Board." Four children were baptized. The first Sunday in June four persons were received into full connection, I were baptized, and I received to probation. June 24, I were haptized and received in full connection. The Epworth League anniversary exercises were held on May 20, a very choice program having been prepared by the president. "The Ideal League" was the last subject presented in an address by the former president, T. W. Brown. It was full of inspiration; he spoke, as it was remarked, as though he were never to address the League again, and so it proved. He was taken with pleurisy, and in three weeks passed away. The church and Sunday-school and all departments of work in the church thus loses most intelligent and active layman. He was an excellent business manager, and always ready with the most hearty and spirited exhoristions and prayers in the social meetings of the church. During his sickness he gave the most confident assurances of his faith in Christ. His samily are greatly afflicted by this blow, and the church and community sadly feet their loss.

W. J. Y. W. J. Y.

New Hampshire Conference.

The work of Evangelist Jackson at Dover was profitable, largely increasing the working force of the churches and greatly adding to their vigor and efficiency. A large class of young Christians has been organised by Pastor Collyer for special drill in Christian life and work.

At Moultonville, July 1, the presiding elder administered baptism to four candidates. The work here is prospering and the people are consident of continued victory, as they also are at North Wakefield, only eleven miles away, where Pastor Hooper holds a Sunday afternoon service with good attendance and interest.

Tuffonboro, like Jerusaiem of old, is besutiful for situation, and here July 8, 5 persons were dedicated to God's service in hely baptism and 3 received into the church from probation.

The same afternoon, at East Wolfbore, only ten miles distant, a goodly congregation await-ed the coming of Pastor Bussell with the pre-siding elder for a presching and sacramental service.

service.

Wolfboro Junction touched the line of victory in the work of Sanday evening, July 8, 12 tearfully confessing their need of Christ and being sided by the pastor and his helpers into personal acquaintance with the Lord.

Third Church, Haverhill, has lately received 4 by letter and 4 from probation, and 2 have been received on probation. The chapel is too strait for the people, and they are anxiously looking for the time when they can enter the new church.

Salisbury is marching on — 13 persons having been baptised since Conference by Pastor Web-ster. July 1, 5 were received on probation, 2 into full membership from probation, and 3 by letter.

East Hampstead is undiamayed by hard times and is moving for the erection of a chapel building for the accommodation of the people who attend service now in large numbers at the school-house.

G. W. N.

The Epworth League at Claremoni, organized at Conference time, now numbers 54 members and is doing excellent work. The quarterly conference has changed its financial plan and adopted the disciplinary method, trustees and stewards having each their share of the work. Nearly all of the more than $1,700 necessary to carry on the work has been provided either in pew rentals or the weekly-offering. Large congregations are present each Sabbath, and earnest prayers are going up for a revival.

respers are going up for a revival.

Rev. P. M. Frost is much pleased at Newport, and the people of Newport are pleased with Mr. Frost. The newly-purchased parsonage makes a delightful home. The pastor notes a gradual improvement in the services, and all are very hopeful for a successful year.

The people of Newport, without regard to denomination, are greatly afflicted in the death north of Dr. Sanborn. While he was a member of the Congregational Church, he was very popular among all classes as a successful physician and a man whose presence in the sick-room was a benediction. He was only if years of age.

Rev. Irad Targart has entered heartily into North Grantham was left as a charge by itself this year, to be supplied by Rev. G. A. Tyrrell. Pastor and people are well suited, and for a small corner of the vineyard there is some encouragement. The parsonage is to be repaired soon after haying time. The claim will not be large, but it is very satisfactory to all concerned.

Grantham and West Springfield were united at the last Conference and Rev. G. B. Goodrich placed in charge. The society at Springfield was a new one. The pastor has found a home in this village in part of the house of Sister Howard, widow of the late Rev. Lewis Howard. They have an excellent congregation here, an average of 45 in the Sunday-school, well-attended prayer and class-meetings, and all are hopeful for a good work of grace. A fine spiritual interest prevails at Grantham. Recently two have asked prayers. The people are widely scattered, so that to attend to the pastoral work requires many miles of travel every week — more than ninety miles being traveled recently between Sundays. A lover of rugged scenery can find much of it here.

It is hoped the effort to erect a covering at the stand on the Claremont comp-ground in time for the meetings this sesson will be successful. A committee is at work to raise the funds.

St. Luke's, Derry, is arranging to build a vestry, either by raising the church or building in the rear. The latter will be much the better

Much estisfaction is expressed at Canada and Canada Sirect over the appointment of Rev. D. W. Downs as pastor. His congregations are increasing. About $20 have been expended on the parsonage in repairs, and more is to be done later in the season. This is a large field to cultivate. The outlying districts give a territory that two or more men ough: to occupy. For many miles Mr. Downs is the only pastor. On a recent Sunday he rode thirty miles to attend a funeral, and in doing so had to omit the services at both churches in Canana. We cannot interfere with death, and have hard work to do so with the time of holding funerals, but it hardly seems that any pastor should be asked to disappoint two congregations on the Sabbath to go into a town not in his charge for a funeral, especially if it could be held on another day. Yet this is often asked, and great complaint made if it is not granted.

The "first round" of visitation is now com-

it is not granted.

The "first round" of visitation is now completed. The satisfaction over the appointments as an early universal as is ever likely to be. This is true not only of the people, but of the pastors. In every case where a change has occurred the quarterly conference has voted to pay the moving expenses of the pastor. These have ranged from $20 = $30 = $32$. At West Unity and West Springfield the brethren paid the bill before the matter was brought to their attention in the conference. It should be done as soon as the pastor reaches the charge. It will be when the churches get used to it. They are quite ready to do their duty.

Rev. D. E. Burns, a student at Wilton.

Rev. D. E. Burns, a student at Tilton, is supply at Wilmot. He is doing faithful and scientions work on a somewhat sterile soil.

The new pastor at Enfield, Rev. C. N. Tilton, has been very kindly received, and his labors are greatly enjoyed. He has three preaching places, and gives careful attention to each one. Having neither horse nor bicycle, he has to do much of his traveling on foot. The financial interests are in a healthy condition, and everything locks hopeful for a year of unusual success.

Lebawon "took time by the forelock," and provided for their finances before the close of the last year, having all their money on subscription. As a result, when the first quarterly conference came, every bill was paid to date and some money in the treasury. Everything is peaceful and prosperous. They offered the partor a three weeks "acation at such time as he desires to take ft.

desires to take it.

Several serious blunders occur in the recent issue of the District News. The proof was read during our absence by the expert in the office who is supposed to decipher all the hieroglyphics that ever come in copy. Besides the incorrect initials of several names, the statement is made that the ladies of Chesterfield gave ten braided rugs to the district parsonage. They did give two, but not ten. Also they inserted a year-old advertisement of the Conference Seminary. We shall give the next number a personal inspection.

East Maine Conference.

Bucksport District.

Buckaport District.

Edmunds. — Rev. S. S. Gross was appointed to this charge by the last Conference, and has taken up the work of the year with his accustomed faith in God and determination to do all in his power to advance the cause of Christ among the people. Aiready there are tokens of victory for the Master. At one point on the charge the congregation has doubled, interest in social services is increasing, souls are seeking the flaviour, and believers are pressing on in the way and drawing nearer to God. The people of this charge feel that no mistake has been made in sending Mr. Gross to them, and they are doing what they can to make his stay pleasant. We notice some much-needed improvements and repairs on the parsonage and property.

Permbroks. — Here Rev. E. S. Gaban has taken.

Pembroks. — Here Rev. E. S. Gahan has taken up his stode and is doing his Master's work. The year opens well. Large congregations greet the pastor at every point on the charge and many words of commendation were heard in regard to the pastor's work thus far. Everything looks encouraging for a year of hard and faithful work. Much-needed repairs have been made on the interior of the parsonage since Conference.

Perry. — Rev. N. J. Jones has received a cor-dial welcome among the people of this charge, and although this is the first time that the peo-ple have had a preacher live among them for many years, and the number of fathful souls is small, yet we are confident there are enough to do a valiant work for the Lord. The year opens Robbinston and North Perry. — Rev. J. D. McGraw is just recovering from a severe "pounding." A few evenings ago the parsonage was invaded by a large number of people, who at once took possession, and when they left the pastor was nearly $40 better off than when they came. One was baptized at a recent quarterly meeting. The prospect is good for a successful year.

Calais, Knight Memorial. — Rev. A. S. Ladd is in labors abundant, and already there are omens of victory for the Master. Good congregations and increasing numbers in attendance at Sunday-school and the social services cause the pastor to feel that the harvest is ripening and that there is much work to be done in marshaling the hosts and leading on in the way of life. Already Mr. Ladd is getting a firm hold of the people, and we hear many warm words of appreciation of his efforts to help this society. The parsonage has received many repairs, thus making it more convenient and pleasant. Besides the regular work of the church Mr. Ladd has been called to make an address on Memorial.

Day, and to deliver an oration on the Fourth of July. Both invitations were accepted and able addresses given. Children's Day was observed, and a very interesting concert was given in the evening.

Calais, First Church.—Rev. J. H. Irvine returns to this charge to take up the work for the fifth year. Everything seems to indicate that it will be a presperous year for the church. A strong and spiritual church, a good Sundayschool, and an earnest desire on the part of all to glorily God, seems to be the condition of affairs at the very opening of the year. Two were recently haptized, and $125 worth of books have been added to the Sunday-school library since the last quarterly meeting.

Alexander.—Rev. B. W. Brassell, the new contractions and the second strong strong the second strong s

Alexander. — Rev. B. W. Russell, the newly-appointed paster of this charge, is proving him-self to be the man for the place. Good congra-gations and a fair degree of interest in church

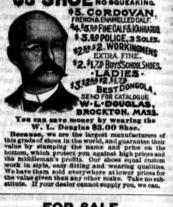

[Continued on age 18.]

For Nervous Exhaustion

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate,

Dn. Ebwis F. Vosz, Portland, Ma., says; "I have used it in my own case when suffering from nervous exhau-tion, with gratifying results. I have prescribed it for many of the various forms of nervous debility, and it has never falled to do good."

W. L. DOUCLAS $3 SHOE NO JAUGARINA

FOR SALE.

PEWS of the Portland St. Church, Haverhill A bargain if bought at once. About 1,000 feet.

O. D. YOUNG, Chairman Com 15 Fleet St., Haverbill, Mass.

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OUT?

Cleaning Silver

there are many articles, good and bad—mostly bad—and but one best, and that is

SILVER CTROCON
ELECTROCON
POLISH
Nearly a million housekeepers say it's best; once tried, you'll so decide.
The captility for the asking or hox

Trial quantity for the asking or box post-paid, 15 cts. It's sold everywhere.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 72 John St., New York.

FREE and watch to over

BARLOW'S INDICO BLUE. D. S. WILTBERGER, SUS N. Ed St., Phila., Pa.

AARON R. GAY & CO. Stationers and Bank Book Manufacturers. ACCOUNT BOOKS

132 State St., Boston, Mass.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect. No. 10 Park St., Room 8, Opp. Prov. R. R. Station.

Church Register.

HERALD CALENDAR.

Northern N. E. S. S. Assembly and Maine	oratel .
	24-Aug. 11
Varmouth Pionic, to W. to grove A cayette	Aug. 9
Camp-meeting,	Aug. 6-15
West Dudley Camp-meeting,	Aug. 4-13
mble Conference at Williamntie, Conn.,	Aug. 7-9
Ashury Grove Camp-meeting, send with per-	Aug. 9-19
Runire Grove Camp-meeting, Rast Poland,	Aug. 9-30
Eastern Mo. Chautauqua Assembly, at Northport, Me.,	Aug. 13-17
Hodgdon (Aroostook Co.) Camp-meeting,	Aug. 11-18
willimantic Camp-meeting,	Aug. 13-19
Inter-denominational Christian Believers,	1200-62
Union Convention - "Days of Pente-	A SECONDARY
east" - at Old Orchard, Me., Dr. L. B.	(DOMBA)

Onts "—at Old Orchard, Me., Dr. L. B.

Bates, leader,

Scansbec Valley Camp-meeting, Richmond,

Aug. 15-16

Aug. 1

ine State Epworth League Conventi Sept. 11, 12 CLO ORGAND MENTINGS FOR 1894 :— Christian Alliance Convention, "Pentecostal Days," Portland District Camp-meeting, General Temperance Meeting,

HEDDING ACADEMIA: Summer School, Chantauqua Assembly, July 23-Aug. 11 Aug. 11-18

POST-OFFICE ADDRESSES. Rev. L. B. Bates, D. D., 278 Meridian St., East Boston

ass. Bev. G. A. Phinney, Dorchester, Mass.

NOTICE — MINISTERS OF NORWICH DISTRIOT, N. E. SOUTHERN CONFERENCE. — Please notify me by July 28 if you purpose to attend the Bible Conference and Camp-meeting at Williamante, Cona, during August, and which road you will travel over—the New York & New England or the New London Division of the Central Versiont. This request is made that we may know to whom to send passes. In order to secure a pass, it will be necessary to report by July 28.

Danielsonville, Conn. J. S. BRIDGFORD.

CORRECTION.—In the Minutes of the East Maine Conference the statistical report gives Winterport charge credit for only $2 for Missions, and West Tremont West Tremont, $2. H. W. Norrox.

Money Letters from June 25 to July 16.

m

0101

k Bq.

Money Letters from June 25 to July 16.

ET Adams. G K Adams, John Aspiswall, L H Arey, EG Ashion. Mrs 8 G Baker, E G Base, S A Brown, J H Boutin, Mrs 8 G Baker, E G Base, S A Brown, J H Boutin, Mrs 8 B Bridge, Brookton Y. M. C. A., W G Baker, S A Benton, Mrs M E Bragg, Geo Batten, Henry, Prock, Thomas Brownlow, D R Bean, S W Hrown. M E Chase, C F Clark, H A Colegrove, F M Clough, M T Chiley, S W Church, jr, C Clark, H Chase, Mrs E M Cakins, O H Corpenter, T E Gramer. Mrs J W Delano, Mrs E H Davis, O W Dookrill, Miss M J Davis, T H Durrell, J M Dougherty, B Dilworth, Mrs E S Drowne, Geo Darsie, Austin Davis. J A Emloist, H R Edwards, W B Edridge, W A Evans, Jos Enright. Mrs H U 777c, O L French, Mrs L Flanders, J M Frost, C H 791ler, C A Farley, V Gray, E I Gale, C E Guthrie, John Gould, Mrs E M Goddard, F Grevenor, N D George, H F Gerdon, T Green. P L Hammsond, H Hall, Dr E L Hall, Mrs Chas Henry, Mrs J D Hopkinson, R P Hurburt, Thomas Haworth, Mrs A D Hardy, G H Radings, S P Holbrook, Miss C Higgins, J A Hust, L G Hale, H P Haylett, E P Herrick, Mrs Geo Hopkins, B A Holden, H T Jenkins, B P Jodd, G W Konney, H Kasid, Mrs H P Keith, Mrs A Kimpton. A A Lewis, Mrs H Lawrenos, Albert Lord. K McConnell, V Wastions, Marbiehead Y. M. C. A., E S Margeson, J A Moreien, B A Maxwell, D F McFaull, A G Misor, M Wastions, Marbiehead Y. M. C. A., E S Margeson, J A Moreien, B A Maxwell, D F McFaull, A G Misor, M Wastion, Marbiehead Y. M. C. A., E S Margeson, J A Moreien, B A Maxwell, D F McFaull, A G Misor, M Wastion, Marbiehead Y. M. C. A., E S Margeson, J A Moreien, B A Maxwell, D F McFaull, A G Misor, M Wastion, Marbiehead Y. M. C. A., E S Margeson, J A Moreien, B A Maxwell, D F McFaull, A G Misor, M Wastion, Mrs L C Quint. W H Reess, G F Biohardson, B P Rymond, A B Ruser, M S Banders, Mrs J Banders, Mrs J G Schlarer, Mrs H Sanith, James Smith, H C Sincilar, L W Sieeper, W L Smith, E Saltmarsh, J A Sherman, Mrs J Banders, Mrs G Smith, E M Stilles, G E Smith, F P Shumway, F, Nrs M E Swith, J H Smart. J H Trow, E O Tayer, O

CORRECTION.— In the Year Book of the New England Southern Conference for 1821-18, Attawangan charge has no credit for Home Mission money. It should have heen St.

The new prospectus of Boston's celebrated in-The new prospectus of Boston's celebrated institution, the New England Conservatory of Music, is just out. The courses of instruction have been improved from time to time, and this Conservatory has always been the leader of such institutions in America. But the present standard shows a breadth of musical education which can probably not be surpassed by any one conservatory in the world, and insures a high state of musical production. of musical proficiency and general knowleds those who succeed in obtaining its diploma.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Elizabeth City, N. C., has just received its new organ from the Hook & Hastings Co., Boston. It is a 2-Man-ual instrument, having an exterior from a spe-tial design. lesign, comprising a case-work of ash fin-in harmony with the woodwork of the ch, and displaying front pipes decorated in soid and colors harmonising with the church

Within the lest thirty-seven years many thousand cases of cancer have been cured by W. J.
P. Kingaley, M. D., of Rome, N. Y. Circulars

Business Antices.

READ the last column on the 15th page for nt of the latest publications of the Methodist Book Concern.

Dean's Rheumatic Pills absolutely cure Rheumatism and Neuralgia. Entirely vogetable. Safe.

Dr. STRONG'S SANITARIUM.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

A popular resort for health, change, rest and coreation all the year. Elevator, Electric Bells, Steam, Open Fire-laces, Sun Parlor and Promenade on the roof, Suites of room with private baths. Croquet, Lawn Tennis, etc. Massage, Electricity—all baths and all remedial appliances. New Turkish and Russian baths in the Annex unsurpassed in elegance and completeness.

Send for Illustrated Circular.

W. F. M. S.

W. F. M. S.

[The midsummer gathering of the N. E.

Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met in Rev. Dillon Bronson's church in Newton, July 11. A good number were in attendance. Mrs. S. J. Steele presided. Rev. Mr. Pitcher led the morning devotions.

Mrs. Alderman presented recent letters from the work in Mexico, South America, China, Japan, Korea and India, speaking of the various scholarship letters as evincing heart culture as well as intellectual progress.

Miss Cushman gave details of the quarter's itinerary in Connecticut, western Massachusetts,

Miss Cushman gave details of the quarter's titinerary in Connecticut, western Massachusetts, Maine and Vermont, where with the assistance of the Conference and district secretaries interest and success had attended some of the missionary meetings in a marked degree.

The treasurer reported the receipts, including the balance on hand April 1, to be $8,692.22; disbursements, $8,788.03; aliver anniversary offerings, $1,559.57. Miss Holt called the attention of suxilizary treasurers to the need of a little of auxiliary treasurers to the need of a little more carefulness in the filling out of the blanks sent them by the district secretaries, in order to facilitate the work of the Conference treasurers.

Mrs. S. J. Steele paid a tender tribute as a me-

Mrs. S. J. Steele paid a tender tribute as a memorial to Mrs. Anna R. Latimer, whose recent death has deprived the Branch of one of its sariiest and most efficient officers.

Mrs. Daniel Steele offered prayer at the close of the morning session.

Rev. Mr. Bronson read from the Scriptures and led in prayer at the opening of the afternoon session. Notice was given of the necessary changes in one or two of the by-laws, with a request that the committee on the constitution and by-laws be empowered to make such tion and by-laws be empowered to make such changes for presentation at the annual meeting

Mrs. Hauser, of Wiscousiu, and gave an interesting address upon the work of the W. C. T. U. in North India. She spoke of the W. C. T. U. in North India. She spoke of the W. C. T. U. in North India. Mrs. Hauser, of Wisconsin, was introduced dences of Christian devotion she served among the ignorant classes reached by mission work in Lucknow and Nynee Tal, and then of being present at the beginning of the work upon the memorial at Lucknow, to be called the Harriet Warren Memorial, to which the thank-offerings of this Society are to be ap-the thank-offerings of this Society are to be ap-plied this year.

Miss Lillian Hale was then listened to with great pleasure as she told of her experiences in North China during the remarkable revival in-terest of last year. At Tsun Hua, the desire for the witness of the Holy Spirit had been such that the school duties were laid aside and the time given to earnest prayer both by pupils and workers. The interest awakened had been deep and widespressd.

workers. The interest awakened had been used and widespread.

Dr. Christiancy, in a short address, gave some very interesting features of the hospital work in Moradabad and Bareilly, saying that the medical work was much more than an entering wedge, as it had sometimes been called. She cited some of the irksome caste observances in the work, and then spoke of the dispensary at Moradabad, and of the hospital at Bareilly as being one of the best to be found.

Miss Nichols, of Lynn, and Miss Lee, of Burlington, Vt., were each presented to the meet-miss Nichols, of Lynn, and Miss Lee, of Bur-lington, Vt., were each presented to the meet-ing. Miss Nichols expressed her pleasure at the prospect of entering missionary labors with Miss Thoburn; while Miss Lee asked the sym-

Miss Thoburn; while Miss Lee asked the sympathy and prayers for her success in Japan, for which she is shortly to embark.

Mrs. S. J. Steele, in closing, voiced the encouragement of the meeting in seeing these young women so enthusiastically engaging in work so important and for which the call has been so long and argently placeting. been so long and urgently pleading. Steele exhorted to activity, as the time is short, remembering that "He shall not fall or be discouraged till he set judgment in the earth," and that God reigns. The benediction was

During the lunch hour the ladies visited the realeyan Home, where the ladies of Newton ad kindly provided entertainment. Opporhad kindly provided entertainment. Oppor-tunity was given to inspect this generous gift, which, under the supervision of members of the executive committee, will soon be ready for occu-pancy as returned missionaries and their families work is manifest on this old battle-field where many viotories have been won for the Master. We predict a grand year for this society. SHUNRALW.

Wisconset. —July 1 a fine congregation en-oyed the service of Rev. A. W. C. Anderson for uarterly meeting.

Guarterly mesting.

Bhespeot also onjoyed the same privilege.
Quarterly conferences at both places were harmonious and hopeful. The ladies at Sheepsoot are making plans to have the andience-room frescoed. The trustess are soon to put in a new furnace (did not need it July 1). Rev. F. W. Brooks has his work well in hand. He reports it calls. He and his jamily were kindly received and as usual he is expecting prosperity. Why not when experience as well as Divine promise are in his favor? A good record is helpful to any man. Hev. E. H. Boynton, of Bucksport, presched here June 24, in the foremon, and at the old Alea meeting-house in the afternoon. Mr. Brooks sesisted in the service.

Rockland.—Rev. C. W. Bradles received a

the old Aless meeting-house in the afternoon. Mr. Brooks assisted in the service.

Rockland. — Rev. C. W. Bradice received a kindly welcome on his return for the second year. The work on this charge is in a prosperious condition. July 1 Mr. Bradice presched on "The National Anniversary, and Our Celebration of 15." In the evening he haptised I and received 5 into full membership. This busy pastro, with other kindred spirits found time recently to spend four days in the Maine woods near Mt. Katahdin. Judging from a characteristic sketch by one brother, they must have had a good time-liere is one expression: "We same, we shouted, we worshiped, we praised!" The account closes with this statement: "We were twice the mon physically said mentally that we were when me left for our outing in the woods." With such a multiplication of power what may we not expect to hear from Rockland! The quarterly conference was held July II, and after the business was transacted a very pleasant informal reception was given the presiding elder and wife in the vestry, which was elegantly furnished for the occasion and beautifully decorated with ferms, pink and white drappry, and Chinese lantering, under the direction of Mr. Bradisc's Sunday-school class. The evening passed most pleasantly, and the favor was highly appreciated. Rev and Mrs. Bradisc assisted Rev. and Mrs. Ogier in receiving.

Dreaden. — July 1; a pleasant Sabbath was pent with this peonie. At the South we had the event was the spent with this peonie. At the South we had the event was the second was the south we had the event was the second wa

Ogier in receiving.

Dresden.—July 1; a pleasant Sabbath was apent with this people. At the South we had the privilege of preaching in (to us) the new church. Having presented here several years ago, we could not realise that it was the same place. A more beautiful church is saidom seen in rural sections. Much credit is due Rev. J. H. Bennett, a former pastor, for this transformation. This is the former home of Rev. E. S. Cahan, one of our ablest preschers. We are on the watch for more such men. A profitable service was held at the Mills in the evening. Repairs to the amount of $600 are being made on the vestry and foundation of the church. A celebration was held, July 4, to aid in raising funds. Rev. S. L. Hansoom, of Belfast, was the orator of the day, and none but good reports resch us of the eloquence and power of the speaker. Rev. M. S. Preble is the newly-appointed pestor, and enters upon his work with much enjoyment to himself and satisfaction to the people. All lines of work are well in hand, and we anticipate a prosperous year for Dresden.

Rockport.—St. John's Day, seventy-one mem-year for Dresden.

Rockport.— 28. John's Day, seventy-one members of 5t. Psul's Lodge, F. and A. M., attended service at the Methodist church. A large congregation was present. The pulpit was elaborately decorated with beautiful plants and flowers. The pastor, liev. J. L. Folsom, preached on "What I Don't Know about Masonry." It was an able effort, and the Masons thought it an excellent Masonic sermon. Mrs. Folsom and son, J. Leslie, jr., arrived about two weeks ago, and they are now quite well estitled in the parsonage. Pastor and wife were given a reception by the members and friends of the society. Children's Day has been observed, and the work is going on grandly. The Sunday evening prayer-meeting is held in the audience-room, as the vestry is too small for the members who go. Several have said, "Pray for me."

Searsmont. — Bunday, June 24, was observed as Children's Day by a sermon in the morning and a concert in the evening; $25 were raised to buy books for the Sunday-school library.

Pitteton.— Rev. C. W. Lowell has been kindly received here, and is well in line with his work considering the fact that the parsonage is still occupied by the family of the former pastor. This would be a good time for this charge to get a new and better home for their prescher's family. Who will give them an encouraging word? This is a fine field for service. The host of young people who came forward to communion would delight the heart of any pastor. One young man, Geo. W. Murphy, was granted a local prescher's license, and is ready for service.

Reduced Rates to Cleveland.

The Baitimore & Ohio B. B. Co. will sell excursion tickets from all ticket stations on its lines, east of Ohio River, to Cleveland, Ohio, for all trains July 9, 10 and 11, valid for return trip until July 31, inclusive, at reduced rates. The rate from New York will be $13; Philadelphie, $11.50; Baitimore, $11; Washington, $11; Oumberland, $5.50; and correspondingly low rates from all other stations.

For more detailed information, address A. J. Simmons, N. E. P. A., 211 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

It is important to keep the liver and kidneys is good condition. Huod's Sarsaparilla is the remedy for invig-orating these organs.

RAYMOND'S VACATION EXCURSIONS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

A Party will leave Boston September 8 for a Grand Tour of Sixty-seven Days to

THE YELLOWSTONE AND CALIFORNIA.

The trip will include a week in the Mational Park, ample stops at Seattle, Victoria, Tacoma and Portland the Columbia Bluver, the pitcureaque Shasta Routs, and extended visits to San Prancisco, Monterey, Santa Earland, Columbia Santa Blura, Los Aspeles, San Diego, etc., returning via Culcular, Fifty-Eight Summer Trips of Five to Twenty-One Days to the Principal Bosorts of New England, New York and Canada.

Tour to Alaska, outward vis the Canadian Pacific Souts, homeward through the Yellowstone Park, July 88. Tours to Colorado and the Yellowstone Park, July 23 and August 15; to the Yellowstone Park direct and return, September 3. A Special European Party will leave New York August 4.

Annual Winter Trips to California once a month or oftener, beginning in October.

Independent Railread and Steamship Tickets to all points. Send for descriptive book, mentioning whether Tel-lowstone, Alaska, European, or Summer tour is desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB, 996 Washington St. (opposite School St.), Besto

Summer Markdown.

It is usual for us to make a Mid-Summer Reduction in our Drapery department. Heretofore the reduction has applied only to high-class goods.

This year we announce our Reduction a month earlier than usual, and it will extend to all medium-grade goods as well. These new prices take effect today:

Ruffled Muslins that were $1.75 and $3, today $1.50.

A fine quality of Spotted Muslins at $2.25.

The last importation of Irish Points at $8 and upwards.

Genuine Brussels at $6 and upwards.

Slik-striped Curtains, all colors (guaranteed the only colored washable curtain), $4.25.

Best tinted shades, made and put up, 65 cents.

Large variety of yard Muslins and Netset 25 cts. amd upwards.

PAINE'S FURNITURE CO.,

48 CANAL ST. | Near Northern Rail- | BOSTON.

THE TITHE GLEANER

Rapidly Becoming the most Popular Method for Raising

CHURCH MONEYS.

As the Tithes are collected they are exhibited like pictures in an album, making it a pleasing task to fill them. Each one filled adds $5 to the treasury ENCOURAGING WORDS, FROM THE WISE.

Your device is excellent. It ought to take well.— CRAPLAIN C. G. MOGABE.

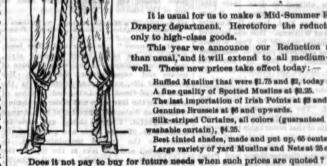

I can see how I could make use of it to great advantage if I wore a pastor.— J. W. Hamilov Over $600 was raised in this way which we should not otherwise have received.— W. J. Ya
We found 33 so useful last year, send us 75 this year,— C. A. Brawhouse.
It has met with great success in our church.— A. H. Marantaw.

They worked like a charm.— Ww. J. Truestow.

Just the time now to put them in the field if you want a good harvest in the fall. Price, 15 cis. per dos.; 85 per hundred. Sample mailed, 10 cts. Address,

A. A. KIDDER.

Mystic, Conn.

Our Book Tuble.

Roger Williams: The Pioneer of Religious Lib-erty, By Osear S. Straus. New York: The Century Company. Price, 81.25.

crip. By Ossar 2. Streen. New York: The Century Company. Price, S.13.

In our colonial history Roger Williams was a unique and picturesque character. Though belonging to a great social movement in favor of civil and religious liberty, he possessed a marked individuality and acted as a disturbing force in whatever community he came to reside. The elements of the agitator were born in him, and he found it the easiest matter, by the most simple utterances, to disturb the even flow of public thought. His words, however harmless they seemed to be, set men's teeth on edge. He acted as a magnet among from filings; the mass was moved, and some clave tenactously to the ideas of the agitator. Those he failed to make close friends were sure to be mortal enemies. A medial course was unknown to him; in whatever he undertook he was sure to be in the extreme.

the extreme.

This extreme personality dropped down among the Puritans of Massachusetts Bay in the height of the immigration. He furnished the soid which created an immediate effervescence. All men realised the presence of a foreign body, though not all were able to comprehend the significance of its advent. At Massachusetts Bay the doctrines of liberty in their higher expression were held implicitly; they were bound up in larger conceptions and contained in statements the full meaning of which had not been brought out in set and regulation phrase. The people feit the whole and meant it, though they had not advanced far enough to be able to say it, or indeed fully to conform their conduct to the highest requirements of liberty. They were say it, or indeed fully to conform their conduct to the highest requirements of liberty. They were in the process, reaching on toward the goal. Roger Williams gave a voice to the great thought struggling in the bosom of Paritanism, boldly asserting the right to think and act in religious matters without the interference of the magistrate. He emphasized the importance of a complete separation between the Church and the State—a doctrine which came to be accepted in all colonies, and which was placed in the foundations of the republic.

Though Roger Williams possessed a marked individuality, his life can never be understood when studied aside from the intellectual and moral movement of which he formed a part. The Reformation and Puritanism were great intellectual landslides; the individual part. The Reformation and Puritanism were great intellectual isndalides; the individual actions were small when compared with the ag-gregate. Though Williams stood on the front edge of the slide, he was a part of it, and his doctrines would have no significance out of this connection. It seems to us to be the fault this connection. It seems to us to be the fault of many who have written of the founder of Providence, to have considered him too much as an independent force. However far advanced, he belonged to his age and to the Puritan movement of the seventeenth century. He would have been nothing outside of it. The age created him; he did not create the age—a truth men are apt to forget in writing the life of so striking a personality. The author of this new life is not entirely free from this fault.

Though one of our colonial landmarks, sureptirely free from this fault.

Though one of our colonial landmarks, surprisingly little is known of Roger Williams. The facts we know can be counted on the fingers of one hand. He came out of the haze of tradition and ere long disappeared in it. Out of these scanty and often unsubstantial materials his biographers are obliged to draw their data. There is no contemporary historynhy. It was biographers are obliged to draw their data. There is no contemporary biography. It was not until 1834 that Prof. James D. Knowles published a life of Williams. This was followed in 1846 by the smaller memoir by Prof. William Gammell. These admirable pieces of biography were supplemented, in 1852, by Rev. Dr. Romeo Elton's life of the founder of Rhode Island. The three Lives have long been out of print; and, in the meantime, some new material Island. The three Lives have long been out of print; and, in the meantime, some new material has been discovered, of which Mr. Straus has availed himself. The new accumulations are not, of course, large, though they make some things in the life of that remarkable man somewhat clearer. A bundle of letters to Mrs. Sadlier, a daughter of Sir Edward Coke, the records from the Charter House and Pennocks. Colleges, together with gisenings from bee records from the broke College, together with gleanings from the Rhode Island records, make the main part of the new material. Mr. Straus has made good use of the new matter, which he has sitted and reduced to form in a careful and animated record of Roger Williams, the pioneer of religious Discourses and Addresses. By George Douglas, D. D., Li. D., Frincipal of the Wesleyan Theological College at Montreal, Canada. Toronto: William Briggs. Price, $1.55.

Dr. George Douglas, the evangelical preacher, the eloquent orator, and a foremost leader in Canadian Methodism, has passed within the vail. Though we shall not be permitted to see him in the flesh again, or to hear the organ tones of a voice which delighted multitudes in both hispheres, we are favored, in this book, with the of his rare sermons and addresses. Though they come without the charm of his personality, they are not, like most deliverances of the sort, they are not, like most deliverances of the sort, mere dead and refuse matter. Their vitality endures the hard test of print. The touch of the printed page is quickening, and revives in the reader something of the old enthusiasm. We quite agree with Bishop Foster that the discourses and addresses in this volume "will courses and addresses in this volume "will be read with entrancing interest by many loving admirers in two hemispheres. They sparkle in every line with poetic genius and Christian fervor, and every page is freighted with the ripe results of culture and scholarship,"

The volume opens with notes of introduction

by William Arthur, Bishop Poster and Dr. Potts. Then follows a brief and approximately Then follows a brief and appreciative biogra-ical sketch of this blind Christian orator. ical sketch of this blind Christian orator. The selections from his discourses and addresses are all brilliant and masterful. In considering, the marvelous endowments and sublime deatiny of man his fragination fiames and mounts to the very throne of the universe; his utterances thrill and surprise the reader at each paragraph, and cause him to feel as never before the grandeur of the creature God made a little lower than the angels of heaven. As an Arminian and Wesleyan he naturally magnified the glory of Christ. angels of heaven. As an Arminian and Wesleyan he naturally magnified the glory of Christ, in whom humanity onliminated and formed a point of union with the Divine. The Godman was at once the hope of the human race and the most expressive revelstion of the divine glory. In such transcendent themes as these the imagination of Dz. Dougias found full scope and freedom and moved forth over the fields of nature, recyclopics and grace with expanded and and freedom and hoved forth over the literature, providence and grace with expanded and facile wing. The preacher who wishes to find striking passages will not fall to turn to this choice volume for a sheaf of steel-tipped

The Wedding Garment: A Trie of the Life to Come By Louis Pendiston. Boston: Roberts Brothers Price, $1.

In men's attempts to know the unknowable or to realize the conditions of the future state they have perpetrated many bits of diction, but these have come mostly in the shape of bodies of divinity, popular sermons, and pions medita-tions for the closet. The novelist has kept close tions for the closet. The novelist has kept closer to the earth, using his genius in depicting phases of human life and society; the real has furnished the conditions under which his imagination was to work out its problems and to produce its new crestions. Mr. Pendleton has made a more snoblidus flight; his genius has pulled aside the curtain and enabled us to note the new conditions on the other side. The wide landscape, rather than a few rays of light through the gates ajar, is opened to the reader's view. In this Swedenborgian fantasy he has reproduced a world so like our own, in its material and moral conditions, that he must have sometimes doubted whether he had really died and gone to the abode of the blessed.

Perleycross. A Novel. Ry R. D. Blackmore. New York Harper & Brothers. Price, $1,75.

Harper & Rechers. Price, 817b.

Those who have read "Lorns Doone" will be in haste to enter upon this new novel, which possesses many of the qualities of the earlier one which was received with so much favor by the best part of the reading public. The scene of this new story is laid in Devon, one of the most charming of English counties. The descriptions of both scenery and life are true to nature, and the main characters are drawn with force and beauty. The reader is able to look into the little world in which they dwell. Dr. Fox and Sir Thomas Waldron's is able to look into the little world in which, they dwell. Dr. Fox and Sir Thomas Waldron's daughter, the main persons in the story, are felicitously presented, and conducted on to the close with rare skill. The death of Sir Thomas threatened to snap the frail thread of the story. A mysterious crime revives the interest, and the credulous folk of Perleyeross not only believe the crime has been committed, but that Dr. Fox is the guildy party. The interest then becomes intense, and holds the attention of the reader to the last chapter. The narrative becomes so real that one is sometimes led to doubt whether he has not seen the things described with his own eyes. This novel must take its place beside the author's earlier work as one of the classics of English fiction.

My Summer in a Mormon Village. By Florence A.

My Summer in a Mormon Village. By Florence A Mersiam. Houghton, Miffin & Company : Boston Price, 81.

"My Summer" is a delightful little book, written in an easy though elegant style, and giving evidence of the author's love of nature and capacity for description. Her pictures of life, animal and vegetable, in the basin of the Great Balt Lake, and sketches of scenery on the lake shore and under the shadow of the great Wahsatch range, are at once strange and delightful. Unusual things are made familiar to us. To the birds and grasses of the desert, to the rugged mountain crag, to desert, to the rugged mountain crag, the waterfall and the lake at the foot of the mountain, her pen lends a peculiar charm. With her descriptions of nature are given vivid With her descriptions of nature are given vivid touches of the peculiar social life in a Mormon village, located on the edge of the great Lake. The volume makes good summer reading for odd moments, either at home or abroad.

Pastime Stories, By Thomas Nelson Page. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. New York : Harper & Bros. Price. $1.58.

by A. B. Frost. New York: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.38.

In the busy age into which we have come, the short story has superseded the long one. Brevity is more and more indepensable in securing the attention of the reading public. Whatever may have been true in the age of Sir Walter Scott or Charles Dickens, the two-volume novellat of today must possess rare merit to secure a hearing. In this volume Mr. Page has catered to the prevailing taste, and, instead of giving a single story, he has provided twenty-two short and crisp tales. They have a flavor of the Southland and the plantation. Negro character, life and wit are drawn with truth to nature. The descriptions are graphic, and the humor is always kindly and enjoyable. If the stories have imperfections, as the author confesses, we quite agree with him that some of them are too good to remain untold.

Our Word and Work for Missions: A Series of Papers Treating of Principles and Ideas Relative to Christian Missions. Edited by Henry W. Rugg, D. D. Universalist Publishing Company: Boston. Frice, $1.

Though wide-awake and carnest, the Uni-ersalist Church has never been much given o missious. The bundle of essays contained in this volume is designed to awaken a fresh interest in the subject. "Some of the conditions est in the subject. "Some of the conditions, needs, and opportunity in mission work in home and foreign lands" are given, together with an account of the founding and progress of the mission in Japan. This seems to be the one mission abroad. The accounts given by Dr. George L. Perin and Miss Schouler will be read with interest. The papers are all freshly and ably written, and present a thorough cauvass of the sublect.

Was the Apostic Peter Ever at Rome ? A Critical Ex-amination of the Evidence and Arguments Presented on Both Sides of the Question. By Rev. Mason Galia-gher, D. D. With an Introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Hunt & Exton: New York. On sale by C. R. Mages, Soston, Price, $1.

The Roman Church is built on Peter. But there is no valid evidence that Peter was ever in Rome, much less that he founded the church there. The question is an old one, but receives new interest from the large num-ber of imported Roman Catholics who credit the fiction. The strongest proof that Peter was bishop of Rome is found in the tradition to that effect. The tradition is very old; but the latest scholarly investigation ands no notice of the tradition earlier than the beginning of the third century, in any authentic document. The arguments pro and con are in this book, and can be studied by any one curious on this question. The large claims of Rome will be found, in this examination, to rest on a very slender thread of historic evidence. The tradition claims that pater went to Rome in the second were of Peter went to Rome in the second year of Claudius—that is, the year A. D. 43—and remained there, as head of the church, twenty-five years, or until his death; but the tradition contradicts facts stated in the New Testament. The New Testament proves an alibi.

The Conversion of India from Paulenne to the Present Time. A. D. 183-1893. By George Smith, LL. D. Floming H. Revell Company: New York. Price, $1.35.

This volume contains the substance of six ectures on missions in India delivered on the Graves foundation at New Brunswick, N. J. As given in the book, the lectures are expanded into eleven chapters, detailing the history of missionary efforts in that great land from the meginning. The Greek Church attempted to convert India. At a later date the Roman convert india. At a later date the Roman Church took up the work; the Dutch followed with much success; and Xavier baptized a multitude of converts to the Roman faith. The modern era of missions in India began with the British occupation. The church and dissenting societies entered the field with courage. Dr. Smith gives a chapter on American effort in that field. The attempts of purpose every little scoled. field. The attempts of almost every little society are noticed. We regret that the author's studies did not extend to the Methodist Missions in the Northwest. Perhaps he never heard of the heroic Butler or the apostolic Thoburn, or of the mighty successes of the Methodist Mis-sions in the Punjaub. When he finds time to renew his investigations, he will discover an in-teresting chapter in connection with this work.

Benjamin Griffith: Biographical Sketches, Contrib-uted by Friends. Edited by Charles H. Barnes, A. M. Philadelphis: American Baptist Publication Society, Sold by the American Baptist Publication Society, 284 Washington St., Boston

Though not a genius nor a man of extraordinary intellectual force, Benjamin Griffith, D. D., marked a high average among his fellows. He knew men and affairs, was clear in his convictions and courageous in the expression of his opinions. Loyal to the Master as well as to his church, he devoted himself with the utmost en-ergy to whatever he undertook. Character was orgy to whatever he undertook. Character was a source of power; everybody accepted him as a good man, full of faith and the Holy Spirit. He did noble work as a Baptist pastor, and then for thirty-six years managed the publishing interests of his denomination in Philadelphia. His devotion and business sagacity enabled him to add very largely to the business. The book contains eighteen beautiful and tender tributes by his friends. The compiler very appropriately suggests that the words of Carlyle are suited to his case: "There is no heroic poem in the world but is at bottom a biography, the life of a man; and there is no life of a man, faithfully recorded, but is a heroic poem of its sort, rhymed or unrhymed." The life of a true and trusted man has found in this book a suggestive and adequate record.

Literary and Social Silhouettes. By Hjalmar Hjorth Soyeses. Harper a Brothers: New York. Price, $1.

Boyesen's "Bilhouettes" form an attractive volume in "Harper's American Essayists." The ossays are snatches of literature — brief touches of various subjects with a graceful pen. There of various subjects with a graceful pen. There is a sanative quality in Boyesen's writing. He lies close to nature and feels her generous pulsations. His smallest pieces are constructed according to the laws of literary art, and tend to develop the taste of the reader in the right direction. The volume is admirable for spareminute reading. Each essay is brief, and the main idea floats like a buoy on the surface, affording the reader the advantage of a continuous view.

The Potter's Thumb. A Novel. By Flora Annie Stoel, New York: Harper & Brothers. On sale by Damrell. Upham & Co., Boston. Price $1.58.

The scene of this story is laid in main, and its purpose is to set forth the interaction between the native and English-speaking population in some extent, how a foreign dividual and finally into the social life of a nondividual and finally into the social life of a non-Christian people. What was effected, in diffus-ing the Greek language and ideas, by the conquests of Alexandria, is now being brought about in India by the English, save that English ideas and the English language are substituted for the old Greek. The story is told in a straightforward and entertaining way, and the characters move out distinctly upon the great and distant stage. The author has the advantage of taking the reader from his American environ-ment and introducing him amid a new set of conditions in which he can hardly fail to become

Cadet Days: A Story of West Point. By Captain Charles King, U. S. A. New York: Harper & Brothers. Price. 51.25.

Capt. King has become a favorite writer. His stories usually have some direct connection with the army and army life and surroundings. In this one he takes the reader back to the beginnings of the soldier's career. The cadet comes from a far Western home. The difficulties of securing the appointment are first set forth, and once at the Military Academy the details of cadet life are quite fully given, thus affording a fair view of the privileges and difficulties of an education in the military school of the republic. The style is finished and animated, and the characters are stated as a desired in the style of the style is finished and animated, and the characters are stated as a desired in the style in the style is finished and animated. are carefully and skillfully drawn. Boys who enjoy Capt. King's way of telling a story, as well as those who wish to know about West Point life, will be sure to read "Cadet Days."

Up and Down the Nile; or, Young Advanturers in Africa. By Oliver Optic. With 8 Illustrations. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.25.

"Up and Down the Nile" is the third volume in the second Optic series of the "All Over the World Library." The charm of observation and description, which have made the author's earlier description, which have made the author's earlier volumes favorites with the young, are found in this last issue. Egypt is a green band of land, stretched for a thousand miles across a trackies waste of sand. The river is literally the life of Egypt. Vegetation ceases the moment the water from the river fails. The book describes a trip that water from Alexandria and down again. the river from Alexandria and down again.

The steamer moves amid the wonders of ancient architecture and art. The pyramids, the tombs of kings and khalifs, the temples of the ancient idolatry, the hall of the mummies, the necropolis of Memphis and the ruins of Karnak, with a

THEMWHY?

Ask the men who are making imitations of COTTOLENE, the new vegetable shortening, why they give up lard and try to trade on the merits of COTTOLENE? Perhaps you can guess why.

Ask the grocer who attempts sub-stitution, why he tries to sell an imitation when people call for that pure, palatable and popular vegetable shortening, COTTO-LENE? Perhaps you can guess.

YOUR WASK

Why should not YOU use COT-TOLENE, instead of Lard for all cooking purposes? It has the highest possible endorsement; from Physicians as to healthful-ness; from Cooking Experts as to superiority; from housekeepers as to economy. Use COTTO-LENE and stick to it.

Sold in 3 and 5 pound palls.

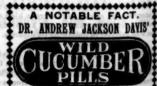

Made only by The N. K. Fairbank Company,

Mr. F. G. BARRY, Utien, N. Y., Editor of The Tourist, writes:-

'I thank you for your prompitude in filting my order for NERVEASE which had a manage of the same of the same and sense of the same age the 'unforgetable which found their way inte or World's Fair value was a bet of your powders. wders. Very truly BAREY."

NERVEASE cures any headache in 5 min-tes. 25 cents. Druggists. NERVEASE CO., 66 Shawmut Ave., Be

Are constantly making friends and will soon be the leading pill in the market. For Stomach and Liver Disorders they are unsurpassed.

Price 25c. bex. Five bexes $1.00.
Ask your druggist for them; or, sent mail on receipt of price by

8. WEBSTER & CO., $3 Warren Ava., Besiden hundred other interesting matters, come in view of the travelers. Mystery and marvel are on every side. In Egypt we tread in the steps of a thousand generations; their works still its about our path; the memorials of them in that rain-less region are imperishable.

Korndine Lettere : A Girl's Own Book. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Chicago: Alice B. Stockham & Co. Price, $2.5.

Price, $2.5.

Koradine is a bright and active young girl, whose physical and mental development is described in this volume. Like Froebel, her parents lived with their children and became their guides and helpers. The seeds of wisdom cropping out in a child are recognized, and their growth promoted. They restired the possibilities in the life of a child, and made studious endeavors to promote them to the utmost, securing thereby a same mind in a sound body; for these counterparts of our nature, however diverse, must co-operate to produce a perfect life in this world. The style is attractive and the letters exhibit an appreciative and helpful view of nature and Providence as seen in the evolution of human life. tion of human life.

es of Harvard. By Elbert Hubb

ime

d in and, cless fe of vater

ul-

5 min

This volume contains a bundle of miscollaneous letters, well written and of interest especially to those who knew the author. The compiler, in his preface, makes this note which will explain the origin of the publication: "The sad passing away of Col. Arthur Ripley Forbes, by the sinking of the steamship 'Titania,' in the English Channel, has piaced in my hands, as executor, a large mass of correspondence. Many of the Channel, has placed in my hands, as executor, a large mess of correspondence. Many of the letters possessing a certain literary value, I have been given permission by the heirs to publish such of the communications as I thought proper." The selections from the mass are arranged in chronological order, and will, as the compiler thinks, "tell their own story."

Magazines.

The Record of Christian Work, with daily The Record of Christian Work, with daily Scripture readings, for July, has for a frontis-piece an excellent portrait of Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., of New York. The number contains notices of various forms of Christian work in different parts of the country. (New York: Fleming H. Reveil Company.)

— The Truth for July has "Notes by the Way," "Separation," "Fellowship," "Walking With God," "Agur's Prophecy," and "What Awaits the Nations," as editorial matter. "The Secret of Christ's Indwelling," is contributed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and a study of Matthew 26 by Rev. S. B. Goodenow. (New York: F. H. Revell Company.)

— The Preachers' Magasine contains fortysix pages with matter suitable for preachers, teachers and Bible students generally. The July number has a sermon by Dr. J. A. Beet on "Present Day Preaching," and another by Mark Guy Pearse on "Moses — His Lite and its Lessons." There is besides a variety of articles editorial and contributed. (New York: Wilbur
B. Ketcham.)

— The Treasury of Religious Thought for July contains a valuable list of articles. There are sermons by several leading divines and contributed articles on specific topics of interest. The prescher will not fail to read "Thoughts for Pastoral Work." It tells him how to improve the church's religious life. the church's spiritual life. (E. B. Treat: New a good list of well-considered articles. William Cooper Amos leads in an able paper containing Cooper Amos leads in an able paper containing suggestions on practical reform in municipal polities. J. W. Bray has an article on the "Philosophical Aspects of the Catholic Reaction"—the reaction during the last fifty years against rationalism. I. W. Howerth has a good word on the "Origin of the English Novel." "The White Druse" is a story-poem by H. W. Taylor. (Chicago Magazine Publishing Company: Chicago.)

The Southern States for June has articles The Southern States for June has articus on "Northwest Louisiana;" "The South Before the War; "the "Needs of the South; "and "Letters from Northern and Western Farmers." (The Manufacturers' Record Publishing Co.:

The Missionary Review of the World — The Missionary Review of the World for July contains a large amount of news from the various mission-fields as well as the discussion of questions relating to the progress and obstacles in the way of missions. The matter is distributed under five general heads or departments: Literature, International, Monthly Survey, Editorial, and General Intelligence. Under the first head the editor shows the imperative need of a new standard of giving. (New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company.) Funk & Wagnalls Company.)

Scribner's for July is well up in the variety and ability of its articles. The frontispiece is Francois Fleming's "The French in Holland," from Hamerton's "Types of Contemporary Painting." "The North Shore of Massary chusetts," extending from Nahant to Rockp on Cape Ann, is a delightful summer article, de scribing the various resorts along our north abore, written by the young judge, Robert Grant, with fine illustrations by W. T. Smedley. Grant, with fine illustrations by W. T. Smedley. Philip Schaff's description of "The Gettysburg Week," written at the time, is now first published. George W. Cable continues his "John March." Philip Gilbert Hamerton writes delightfully of "French Art in Holland." Octave Thanet sketches "American Types of Working-men." Hrusst Plagg describes "The New York Tenement-house Evil." The entire list of articles furnishes pleasant reading for the month. (Charles Scribner's Sona: New

— The Gespel in All Lands for July contains much valuable intelligence from all the mission-fields, especially those opened by the Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Leonard gives an interacting account of his trip to North China. There are also notices of the various native tribes found in the missions on all the continents. (Hunt & Eaton: New York.)

Eaton: New York.)

—The July Atlantic is among the best. Amid a dozen or fifteen articles the reader will stop and consider William R. Thayer's treatment of the "Letters of Sidney Lanker." "Locretius," by R. Y. Tyrrell, recalls not the dead Epicarcanism, but the book and the ideas of the man. "The City on the House-top" is a pleasant account of family life on the flat roof in our hot season. Mary Hartwell Catherwood's "Pontiac's Lookout" has a flavor of old Indian life and tradition. Frank Bolles has a delightful description of scenery in Nova Scotia under the title, "The Home of Glooscap." Bradford Torrey writes delightfully "On the Beach at Daytona." "The Mayor and the City," by Harvey N. Shepard, describes the process by which the town of Boston has been transformed into a great city. "The Red Bridal" is a story by Lafoadie Hearn. Timeliness and ability characterise this number of the Atlantic. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.)

Boston.)

—The Forum for July has, as usual, a rich table of contents. It opens with a symposium on "The Violence of Religious Intolerance in the Republic." Under this general head Frederic R. Coudert, a Roman Catholie lawyer of New York, makes a special pies against "The American Protective Association." Prof. J. H. McMaster follows with an admirable historic presentation of the Know Nothing movement, showing its true causes in the influx and aggressions of foreigners and the course of American feeling and action down to the present hour. Frederic Harrison gives "Carlyle's Place in Literature; "Theodore Rooseveit treats of "The Manly Virtues in Practical Politics;" President Hall, Thomas Davidson and Marths F. Crow write to secure clear aims in education; and write to secure clear aims in education; and Montgomery Schuyler shows the government's failure as a builder. The articles are all readable and solid. There has seldom been a better number issued. The new editor shows himself equal to the old one in managing the Forum. (The Forum Publishing Company: New York.)

Forum Publishing Company: New York.)

— The Methodist Review for July-August is an antiquarian number. Of the nine contributed articles six might as well have been written before the American Revolution. They deal with spent forces and dead issues. Dr. Mudge's "Beventy-five Years of the Asthodist Review," evinces both timeliness and labor in the preparation. He had to go over the seventy-five volumes to secure his material, and was at great pains in the selection and arrangement of it as well as in the writing out. The article is a straightforward, well-written and luminous paper, giving a bird's-eye view of the Quarierly in its origin, progress and transformations under its different editors. Dr. Rawlina' "Our Constitutional Problem," and Judge Sibley's "General to dinerent colors. Dr. nawlins "Our Consti-tutional Problem," and Judge Sibley's "General Conference Powers and Procedure" are timely; that is, they will be of use a year and a half hence to those chosen to the next General Con-ference. The other six — Dr. Withrow's "Early ference. The other six - Dr. Withrow's "Early English Drams," or miracle plays; Dr. Griffith's "Methodist Doctrine of Free Will;" Dr. John Wier's "Forms of Belief in Transmigration;" Or. Wheeler's "Shelley's Place in English Poetry;" Dr. Shewood's "Mystery of the Trinity," and Dr. Gallagher's "The Prophetic Writings"—will scarcely remind the reader of Trinity," and Dr. Gallagher's "The Prophetic Writings"—will scarcely remind the reader of anything that has happened in this greatest of the centuries. Our great Review should not be satisfied, with Jonathan Oldbuck, to decipher and renew the inscriptions on the tombs of venerable ancestors. We are in the current world and in a century where steam and electricity have overteined old traditions and maxims and brought us face to face with a totally new condition of things. With such live subjects, the Review should modernise and deal more largely with questions in control today, retaining the literary qualities, but touching upon a larger number of current topics. The articles in the number are all well-considered and written, but while we would not keep out of sight this redeeming feature, we can hardly be too earnest in urging timeliness as indispensable to the highest success of the Review. Readers more and more demand to be kept in touch with the new world of the hour. On turning to the editorial department, we have a handsome tribute to Dr. J.O. Peok, a proper word on outer adornment, and then a nine-page essay in small type on "fall-cide." Suicide is a great subject—it was in Plutarch's day; but there are more current topics for July in the year of our Lord 1994.

Speaking of vacation - the best kind is that which sends one home rested in body and vig-orous in mind, with the bloom on the cheek that follows pienty of out-door exercise and nights of refreshing sleep. Up in Vermont where the very air invigorates and the scenery is a never-ending source of delight and inspiration one can res of Lake Champlain and through the Green shores of Lake Champian and inrong a me orecan Mountain region are hundreds of attractive farm houses and summer hotels where the vacationist is sure to find warm welcome. One needn't nec-cessarily be a millionaire to assumer in Vermont. for board range from $4 to $10 per we and the cost of getting there is most reasonable the Central Vermont railroad having made spe cial summer excursion rates to every important point in the State. Mr. T. H. Hanley, New Eng-land passenger agent of the road, 260 Washing-ton St., Boston, will gladly post one regarding resorts, transportation rates, etc.

The Feed Exposition is an educator for housekeepers. You are not obliged to attend it to appreciate the value of Bordea's Peerless frapprated Cream. Your Groose can supply you always ready; uniform results assured. Insist upon having Bordea's.

Educational.

DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

BENRY A. BUTTZ, Madison, N. J.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY National and International Growth.

The past roar bearers of University degrees from sightly-use American and Foreign universities, colleges and professional schools is we pursued professional and other advanced studies in Boaton University. Its 1112 metriculars came from twenty Foreign, and from hirty-seven American states and Territories. To discuss the sevent of the se

THE PISK TRACHERS' AGENCIES

EVERETT O. FISK & CO.,

Ashburton Floce, Boaton, Mass, 19 Fifth Avenne, New York, N. Y. 106 Wahash Avenne, Chicago, Ili. 801 128 6c, Washing St., Lon Angeles, Cal. 20 March Street, Toronto, One.

Send to any of the above agencies for 18-page Agency Manual, rec. Currespondence with employers is invited. Registration forms sent to teachers on application, Large numbers of school officers from all sections of the Public School supernisements of New Sugiand, have applied to us for teachers.

$3,000,000.00

WESLEYAN ACADEMY.

Wilbraham, Mass.

The Fall Term of 78th year ope

For Catalogue and any information write Rev. WILLIAM R. NEWHALL,

WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY,

Middletown, Co

Three Undergraduale Courses of Sindy. The work of the last two years largely elective. Post-graduale courses in the various departments, Ample Robillies for Laboratory work is all courses.

Expenses reasonable. Pres tuition provided for a large number of the most needy sindents. Boom reat in college buildings, and board in clubs, at moderate prices. Ladies admitted to equal privileges. Examinations for admission, commencing at 9 A. R., June 28, and Sept. 8, 184.

For further information address

Rev. B. P. RAYMOND, President,

Vermont Methodist Seminary.

MONTPELIER, VT.

Fall Term begins September 4.

Collegiste Course; high-grade Seminary Courses; College and Professional School Preparatory Courses; usuaual facilities for Music; Art Department; Business College with Diploma.

Beautifully located at the Capital of the State; fine buildings; best moral and religious influences; teachers take a personal interest in the welfare of pupils; expenses moderate.

E. M. SMITH, Principal.

LASELL SEMINARY

For Young Women,

Auburndale, Mass.

Auburndale, Mass...

Biggests to parents seeking a good school consideration of the following points in its methods:

Int. Its special care of the health of growing girls.

Besident physician supervising work, diet and exercises; students flood in good variety and tong sleep; a fine granusium furnished by Dr. Sargett, of Harvard; bowling-alley and awimming-bath; no regular or foreknown examinations, etc.

Its broadly planned course of study.

Boston's proximity both necessitates and helps to furnish the best of teachers, including many specialists; with one hundred and twenty pupils, a faculty of thirty. Four years' course: In some likenge squal to college work, of the planned rather for home and comenty life. Two studies required, and two to be chosen from a list of eight or en electives. One preparatory year. Special students admitted if eighteen years or over or graduates of High Semires as inchesis.

3d. Its home-like air and character.
Training in self-government; limited number (man declined over full for lack of room); personal oversig in habits, manners, care of person, room, etc.; comfor not stated.

4th. Its handlwork and other unusual departments. Pioneer echool in Seientific teaching of Cooking, Mil-inery, Dress-Cutting, Business Law for Women, Home lanitation, Swimming.

C. C. BRAGDON, Principal.

NEW ENGLAND METHODIST BOOK DEPOSITORY MUSIC BOOKS

Camp-Meetings and Gospel Services.

IMPERIAL SONGS: Ry J. L. HUBLET, D. D., and of the Best Scul-stirring Songs, with more than 160 new, inspiring Hymns, supertor Reaponatro Services, etc. A sample in paper to any address for 16 cents. 560 pp. - By mail 56 cts. per copy. - 540 per bandred.

LIVING HYMNS: BY JOHN WANAMARNE and J. R. Contains all that is UNFADING TREASURES: By Kinkyathion, O'KAYE. The latest issue and one of the beel. 284 pp. 28 cents per copy. 280.56 per hundred.

EPWORTH SONGS: By J. P. Ranky and G. N.

POPULAR SELECTIONS: Prom Mysmas New one hundred choice hymne bound in manile cover vice, $10 per hundred. A good book at a low price.

Ready July 20, FINEST OF THE WHEAT Number 2.

We have all the books in the market, and will be glad to send samples on approval.

CHAS. R. MAGEE, Agent, 38 Bromfield St., Boston.

RHODE ISLAND, East Gree

East Greenwich Academy. Founded 1805. Both sexes. On Marragensett Bay. Steam heat and electric light. Sndowed. Twelve courses. S008 a year. Sopt. 1. Write for liustrated cata-logue. F. D. BLAKESCER, D. D., Printipal.

BAST MAINE SEMINARY

Bucksport, Maine. Rev. A. F. Chase, Ph. D., Principal

College Preparatory, Scientific, Assatinte, Rormal, Art and Musical Courses. Military Toxicis, Tuniness College, with first-class instruction. Location unsurpassed. Easy of access by boat or by rall. Terms low. Send for Cata-logue.

New Hampshire Conference Semi-Dary and Female College.

A Coeducational Institution.

SIX years are covered by the attidies of the Classic-Al Course: Latin, Greek, French, German, Higher Bu-glish, and the Sciences.

FIVE years are necessary for the course in Beiles

FOUR years for each of the following courses: Cologe Preparatory, Latin Scientific, Instrumental Music, and Yould Music.

THERE years are required for the Medical Prepar-story, Legal Preparatory, English Science, and Art Courses Science, and Art Courses TWO years in Elecution and the Study of Expres-

ONE year for the Commercial Department.

Health. Pure air, spring water, the best of sanitary a angements, regular habits, good board, and a Christis some, leave little to be destred as means for promotin

Two Hundred Dellars a year pays for tuition, bundry, room-rent, and steam heat. Fall Term opens Aug. 29, 1894.

2W Send for a Ostalogue to the President,

REV. J. M. DURRELL, Tilton, N. H.

ZION'S HERALD.

Founded 1828.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Per Year, Postage Prepaid,
Ministers and their Widows,
THE DATES following the name of each subsets indicates the rand month to which it is paid, DISCONTINUATED. Papers are continued to there is a set of executed by law.

DISCOURTANCE of the control of the c office or expression of these can be produced, could money by Registered factor.

FOR ADVERTISERS it is one of the same mediums that can be employed for flow Evolution, it has probably $8.50 readers in educated homes. Cards with advertising rates sent on aplication.

Specimen copies free.
All letters of Remittances, or relating to Esnewals, and Subscriptions, and other business Matters econocied with the paper, should be addressed to A. S. W.E.D., Publisher, 36 Bromfield Roston. 8

Review of the Week.

Tuesday, July 10.

The bill in the German Raichstag to repeal the anti–Jesuit laws rejected by the Bundsrath.
 The Pope in an extremely feeble condition.

The Naval appropriation bill passes the

- Cassation of rioting and disorder in Chicago, enabling the cars to move.

- The 64th annual convention of the American Institute of Instruction opens at Bethle-

— A section of Commercial Wharf in this city fell, killing one man and wounding four.

— Labor organisations arrange for a m meeting of sympathizers with the strike. G Flower of New York says he will at once or es oceur TYH DAIV out troops if disturbanc

Wednesday, July 11.

Violent earthquake shocks felt in Constan-nople, creating a panic among the people and using the loss of many lives.

— Mr. Peffer offers a resolution in the Senate in favor of the government control of the rail-roads; Senators Davis and Gordon score the Populist for his incendiary utterances.

Populist for his incendiary utterances.

Debs, Howard, and other Railway Union men arrested for conspiracy.

Men in various trades in Chicago strike, and Sovereign calls out the Knights of Labor.

Troops ordered to Sacramento to contro

-" Bat" Shee, of Troy, sentenced to be executed, Aug. 21. The Teachers at Saratoga open their session, as also the National Educational Association at

- The labor leaders east of Ohio refuse to join the strike.

An amendment introduced in the New York Constitutional Convention in favor o compulsory arbitration in labor troub

The House bill admitting Utah as a State to the Union passes the Senate.

Thursday, July 12.

Additional earthquake shocks in and about Constantinople; many buildings destroyed and ome 200 lives lost.

— As the outcome of the Korean trouble, war etwern China and Japan is believed to be im-

The Senate passes unanimously Daniel's resolution indorsing the action of President Cleveland in sending troops to Chicago.

— The Senate passes the Pension and other ap-propriation bills; the House passes the McRae Railroad Land Fortesture bill.

Sovereign's appeal to the Knights of Labor trike responded to by only 14,000 members of

The strikers at Bacramento wreck a train killing the engineer and three soldiers and seriously injuring four others.

— Twelve roads are tied up at Toledo.

— Ten thopsand delegates to the Christian En-deavor Convention meet at Cleveland.

Japan accepts England's offer of mediation in the Korean dispute.

— The French Chamber of Deputies rejects the opensi for an income tax, and votes confidence

Germany enacts a tariff against Spain.

The Army and Fortifications appropriation is pass the Senate.

— Trains again in motion in the West; the strike nearly at an end; Debe and Sovereign recall their orders and the men may be taken back by the several roads.

— The committee on Suffrage in the New York Constitutional Convention to report in favor of an educational qualification for voters.

The fall in silver is constant.

-Gladstone finally declines to be a candidate for a seat in Parliament.

-Chauncey M. Depew sails for Europe.

— Rev. D. C. Knowles, D. D., of the N. H. Conference, nominated by the Prohibitionists of New Hampshire for Governor.

Saturday, July 14.

- The earthquake shocks continue at Constantinople, increasing the panic among the inhabitants.

- Fifty-four deaths from cholera at St. Peter on Thursday, the 12th

-The River and Harbor bill pas The end of the strike. Debs, president of the A. R. U., offered to call off the strike if the General Managers of the railroads would take back the strikers, which they utterly refuse to lapses

- Patrick Prendergast, the assass Carter Harrison, hanged yesterday.

- Erastus Wiman released on $30,000 ball.

-Rev. Dr. Parkhurst appeals to the citizens of New York in regard to the mayoralty cam-

-George R. Graham, founder of Graham's Afagasine, dies at Orange, N. J.

The close of the strike influences foreign exchange in our favor and advances stocks.

Monday, July 16.

The drug stores in Cambridge closed yes-

The gale at Newport damaged 500 buildin Cholers sweeping through China and Rus-ia; 40,000 deaths in Canton alone; St. Peters-ourg in the throes of the plague.

 Employees of the Mexican Post Office De-partment have in a series of thefts stolen more

- Rallway strikers make more trusble at Chicago; loss to rallways estimated at perhaps $8,000,000.

METHODS IN METHODISM.

UNDER the above heading President Warren gives the readers of Zion's HERALD an extract from agreeent article of not insensible to his appreciative reference to me. But I must be allowed to protes against being regarded as "spokesman" for "conservative" or any other brethren. My study of our church constitution has been wholly free, with no interest or party to serve, but from a desire to know for myself, as a lawyer and Methodist, what our organic law is. At times I have written articles to expose what seemed to me most radically wrong notions of it. In this way came my answer to Dr. Potts. Until seeing what Dr. Warren writes, I was not aware that the me erroneous ideas had been published in the HERALD. But with that fact before me, I ask space to present the opposing view, substantially as in answer to Dr. Potts. In response to his first article, I said: —

"Now, by all legal usage and definition, the erms organic law, charter, constitution, are of essentially like import with reference to a body which is constituted by either of them. Unless authority is given therefor, the creature of one or the other remains powerless to change it.

This is a universal principle in constitutional law. If not otherwise provided, only the power which creates can destroy. The Conference of 1806 created the delegated General Conference, and gave to it a charter or constitution. That and gave to it a charter or constitution. That fixed a time for the meeting of the body in its first session, and 'perpetually' thereafter. The Conference of 1808 confessedly had plenary power in the premises. If it did not intend to ender this unchangeable, unless by amendatory process, which must go before the preachers, the original source of power in the Annual Con-

the original source of power in the Annual Con-ferences, why was the provision made of per-manent obligation?

"On the untenable theory of Dr. Potts, they were in terms making 'perpetual' what the General Conference at its first session could change. Can we sacribe such folly to the fathers, even with 'their flery seal?' They also were possessed of that 'Methodist common sense' to which the Doctor referse and if this bandmitted. possessed of that 'Methodist common sense' to which the Doctor refers; and, if this beadmitted, never could have been guilty of the farcical blu ader involved in solemnly enacting as a law to stand 'perpetually' what their mere creature might set saide in four years. This is too obvious for argument. But it serves to show the error into which my brother, with others, has fallen. Their mistake is in assuming that the ral grant of governing titution gives in the au ng power which to me rules and regulations' for the church, author ises the General Conference alone to chang that instrument. This is pure assumption. The clause, so far as it relates to the enactment of the confers simply legislative power, under an in accordance with all the provisions of the charter, constitution, or organic law—the name is immaterial—the instrument framed by the Conference of 1808, by which the delegated body was created. This view is consistent with the whole document then enacted, while the contrary notion renders it palpably inconsistent with itself, throws our constitutional system into confusion, and convicts the 'fathers' of a child's play in important action, incompatible with ordinary, let alone Methodist, common sense."

To this Dr. Potts replied by saying, in substance, that the proceeding was unconstitutional, because the restrictive rule proc of the organic law. In answer to that I directed attention to, but also said: -

"I confront my good brother's theory with facts. They are these: The General Conference of 1808 was a sovereign body; as such, possessed of absolute power in our church government; of absolute power in our church government; therefore legally competent to enact a constitution to govern us. This it did. The new representative General Conference is its creation—the creature of that constitution. Hence the old Conference rightfully could say when its sessions could be held. This it did, in the organic act creating the body, by providing that after 1812 it should meet 'on the first day of Mau, once in four years, perpetually,' Dr. Potts May, once in four years, perpetually.' Dr. Potts says this could legally have been repealed in 1812, and so prevented from ever going into ef-fect. I sak for his authority. He gives none. I request him to explain how men of common feet. I sak for his authority. He gives none.
I request him to explain how men of common sense solemnly could make a law 'perpetually' to hind a body they created, when its creature might repeal it in four years? The Doctor again is dumb. His theory admits of no answer. There is none. The body which passed that act had the unquestionable power to make it of perpensant obligation. They expressly did a Dr. manent obligation. They expressly did so. Dr. Potts, with a few others equally in error, entertains the false notion that, in the teeth of this law, the body it was intended to bind may repeal it. The case needs only to be stated to show that such a claim is 'pure assumption.' The facts are

44. The case needs only to be stated to show that such a claim is 'pure assumption.' The facts are immovably against it.

"One thing more. If Dr. Potts' notion is correct, why is it that in all our constitutional history there has been so strict an obedience to the rale now in process of change? How comes it that until this late date none have sprung up to say with the Doctor that the General Conference can meet at pleasure—every year if it so desires? The obvious answer is that the paramount obligation of the law, enacted by the sovereign power which created the representative Conference, required it to meet on the 'first day of May once in four years.' Only in these late days, by some to whom the constitution is an unpleasant restraint, have these 'newfangled' theories, which ignore the facts and defy the law, sprung up. The Doctor, with all his great strength, vainly attempts to defend them. I only add that, according to the notion which he advocates, the law as to extra sessions legally might be made a nullity; for the Conference.

ence always could adjourn to meet on the call of the Bishops, or of ten Annual Conferences, it it

No answer has been made to this, as I believe. At all events, I am ready with my humble abilities to sustain the position taken, against any one however able and learned, on the law and facts of our ecclesiastical history.

With reference to President Warren's With reference to President Warren's suggested application of my "new doctrine" as to amendment, a word should be said. As I state, the Restrictive Rules can be amended only by the process they prescribe. This results from the settled principle. ciple that the sovereign power equally with the officers of government is bound by the constitution it enacts, and any act or reguconstitution it enacts, and any act or regu-lation of either, against it, is "yoid" (Cooley's "Constitutional Limitations," 3). Now it happens that lay representation has been authorized by a provision of the Sec-ond Restrictive Rule, the force and effect of which is to change to that extent the composition of the General Conference. Further, in 1883, this amendment was judi-cially and authoritatively declared to ex-clude women. The law of the Restrictive clude women. The law of the Restrictive Rules therefore is, that they cannot be dele-gates. But to admit them by amendment, cond Rule must be changed, and that must be done by the restrictive rule procdoctrine that to pass around a proposal to admit women, and get a majority vote in the Conferences for it, would change the law. The Restrictive Rules require the assent of three-fourths of each Conference in order to amend them. The President's supposition that they have no application to the "original possessors of the sover-eignty"—the preachers—is, I think, wholly untenable. The law is, "that upon the concurrent recommendation of threefourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences who shall be present and vote on such recommendation, then a ma-jority of two-thirds of the General Conference succeeding shall suffice to alter any of the above restrictions except the first article." But as Dr. Warren construes it, while it takes three-fourths to enable the General Conference to change a rule, a bare majority can do so independently of that body! Then how about the first article? The Sixth Rule was amended in 1828-1832, in part to prevent a change of that, even by two-thirds of the General Conference with three-fourths of the Annual Conferences. Yet the President's theory mine - would enable a bare majority in the Annual Conferences alone to amend it. The point he overlooks is, that where a mode of amendment is provided, that must be followed. Such is the case with resp to the Restrictive Rules, but not as to the organizing provisions of the constitution which precede them. The "new doctrine," if it be such, applies only to the latter.

Marietta, O.

Pay the Price

Royal Baking Powder is shown by chemical tests absolutely pure and 27 per cent. greater in strength than any other. Many second-class brands of baking powder are urged upon consumers at the price of the high-cost, first-class of the Royal Royal. These powders, because of the inferior quality of their ingredients, cost much less than the Royal, besides being 27 per cent. less strength. If they are forced upon you, see that you are charged for Royal only a correspondingly lower price for them.